Five dogs die after rabid coyote attack

by MARTHA PERKINS
Editor

One dog was killed, four have been put to sleep and seven people are receiving rabies shots after a rabid coyote attacked 11 dogs outside of Haliburton Village.

The attacks began on the night of Sunday, September 24. Three coyotes were seen on the Harburn Road, just past the former Eagle Lake turnoff. None of the dogs attacked were killed instantly, but three were either too young to have received rabies shots or seriously injured enough to warrant being put down.

Four people who live in the area were not bitten by the coyotes, but did come in contact with their dogs after they were attacked. They are receiving rabies shots—five shots in the arm over one month, which is much less painful than the former treatment of 14 shots in the stomach in 14 days.

One of the owners phoned the Ministry of Natural Resources in Minden early Monday morning. Fish and wildlife supervisor Stan Flemming says a conservation officer was sent to the area immediately. He spent four or five hours searching the area for the coyotes and notifying neighbours.

A spate of attacks west of the cemetery (off the Harburn Road) took place Monday night. Lisa Bird was in her garden when a coyote came very close to her and she immediately went inside. Later, her cousin, Jim Bird, who lives across the road, saw one coyote attack his dog, and a larger one in the distance. A third coyote wasn't seen.

"It (the attack) was right on my front lawn," Bird says. "When I came out, I saw the coyote chasing my dog. I was loading my gun and chasing it." Bird shot and killed the smaller coyote and thinks the large one must have been rabid as well because "I shot three times with a 12-gauge gun and he just looked at me as if nothing was going on." The dead coyote had porcupine quills in its nose and smelled of skunk, indicating it had attacked other animals as well.

Cindy Boughner, who lives down the road with her husband Roy and children, had let her dog out for a few minutes. She then heard the dog bark and yelp, and when she got to the window, "this coyote just came barrelling over the bank and ran into the car park." The children were screaming as the dog ran up to the porch, bleeding, and the coyote continued to attack it.

"I thought it would kill her," Boughner says, but when the coyote backed off, she let the dog into the house. It ran downstairs and no one

More teachers are needed as schools fill up

With more than a 10 per cent increase in elementary student enrollment this year, the Haliburton County Board of Education will be hiring more teachers.

During last Tuesday's meeting, board superintendent Dale Robinson asked trustees to consider new requests for additional staff at schools in Minden, Wilberforce and Haliburton.

Minden's Archie Stouffer Elementary School has seen an increase of 60 students, with more than 600 now enrolled. Two new teachers have been requested, which will bring the Pupil Teacher Ratio [PTR] down to 15.8 to one (Director Stuart Baker says the PTR at J. Douglas Hodgson Elementary School in Haliburton is 15.7 to one). Part-time teacher Ted Reid will become full-time, and an additional 1.5 teachers will be hired.

Although Wilberforce Public School has seen a small increase in pupil enrollment, Robinson said a full-time educational assistant is needed to supervise during lunch hours and to provide help for students with learning exceptionalities.

Residents want to wreck salvage plan

by SUSAN GROBER
Staff Reporter

Furious over a proposed automobile salvage yard near Gelert, a group of about 30 neighbouring residents filled Snowdon Township Council Chambers on Monday night to express their dissatisfaction with attempts to handle the matter.

At a previous public meeting, Bill Linnington requested rezoning approval to set up a salvage yard on his 21-acre property on County Road 1. With the building of berms and planting of trees and shrubs, the yard would only be visible from his own property, Linnington said. A garage with liquid storage tanks in the ground below would eliminate any harm to the environment, he added. Any vehicle brought to the yard would be drained into the tanks.

"You've got to wake up, you've got to put your foot down, you've got to have priorities," resident Walter Griffin told council at Monday's meeting. "You guys have a real hot potato on your hands, and I don't think you realize what you're dealing with. If you don't watch out, you're going to drop the potato."

Last Monday Reeve George Simmons noted the fears and concerns expressed by residents at the last meeting. These include possible harm to water of a nearby creek, lack of fencing or barriers to separate the yard from neighbours, negative impact on resale values of neighbouring homes and future residential lots, and proper storage of acid and anti-freeze. A petition started by residents against the yard states the proposed site is inappropriate as it is too close to residential and agricultural lands; and that the yard would be harmful to the environment.

Council met with Linnington and inspected the site, "contemplated all your concerns, and made a decision we feel will fulfill all your concerns," said Simmons. Before rezoning would be allowed, Linnington would be required to enter into a site plan agreement with the Banding together to fight Ray Moore's proposed Minden Place Condominiums, residents in the neighborhood made a "disturbing" presentation at last Thursday's council meeting and the decision to rezone has again been postponed.

Reeve Moore declared a conflict of interest and left council chambers before discussion on the matter. Council had planned to vote on his proposed 56 unit development after hearing presentations from Moore's consultant and a delegation of residents in opposition. Moore plans to build the condominiums on the hill above the Rockcliffe Hotel fronting Newcastle and St. Germaine Streets. During previous meetings, council stalled on a decision because it had no water and sewer capacity study, and members felt the complex needed a second vehicle access point and additional parking for a commercial unit.

An official plan amendment and rezoning are necessary to allow construction of the one three-storey, 36-unit apartment and two two-storey, 10-unit apartment condominiums. Included in the proposal would be 750 square metres of commercial space fronting Newcastle Street.

The original report by municipal planner Bob Lehman supports the proposal, stating, "the property is an ideal location for the proposed use as it is near the commercial facilities of the downtown core and within walking distance of the local school, parks and medical facilities..."

"It also provides an appropriate use of otherwise unavailable lands and provides a much needed variety to the current housing types in Minden."

What really shook council was the last presentation, made by Mary Anne Wilson who, with her husband Wayne, represented a delegation of more than 12 families against the proposed condominium.

Mrs. Wilson reported on a discussion with the Lehman. From their meeting on September 15, Mrs. Wilson said she believes the plans used for his report "were slightly misleading and weren't representative of the proposal." Discoveries from her meeting with Lehman are as follows:

□ Upon preparing his report and recommendations on the development, Lehman "was not aware that the two shrubbed areas on the plan are, in fact, the

Overcrowding situation will get worse: report

by SUSAN GROBER
Staff Reporter

As today's primary students grow older, current accommodation problems caused by increasing kindergarten enrollments will result in overcrowding at Haliburton Highlands Secondary School by 1995.

That was the message at last Tuesday's Haliburton County Board of Education meeting, when trustee Cheryl Murdoch gave a report of the Minden and Haliburton accommodation committee, covering the two "hotspot" areas where increasing enrollments of kindergarten students has created overcrowding.

By September 1990 the problem will be magnified, as these half-day kindergarten students become full-time pupils, she said.

Currently, about 80 kindergarten students at Minden's Archie Stouffer Elementary School are being housed at the converted Dollo's IGA store. A fourth kindergarten class has been added this year, and by September 1990 there will only be one more year left in the board's three-year lease.

The 82 kindergarten students of Victoria Street School are being taught at Sir Sandford Fleming College's Lakeview Campus. By next year, the school won't be able to

Rabid coyote scare reinforces need for vaccinations

was allowed to touch her. The dog is now in quarantine for three months.

"It was pretty scary that night," Boughner says. "It will be quite a while before my dog goes out of my sight."

The dog which was killed was a small terrier breed owned by Irene Roberts. The coyote also attacked Mark and Donna Brohm's Newfoundland dog, but because its coat is so thick, the skin wasn't punctured. Their dog is also under quarantine.

Jim Bird, whose hound puppy had to be put down, is angry that the people in his area weren't told a rabid coyote had been spotted nearby the night before. Then they would have kept their dogs inside. As well, he wasn't pleased that the dead coyote wasn't picked up until the next morning.

Flemming said that the officer did contact neighbours after the first attacks but "where do you go to? How far around? We certainly were in that area talking to neighbours. We had officers in the area both days. I don't know how much more we can do."

There was some confusion over who was picking up the dead coyote because three agencies are involved in the incident: the MNR, health unit, and Agriculture Canada, under the supervision of Dr. Bob Boneschyn.

An MNR worker, who is now receiving rabies shots, collected the coyote on Tuesday morning.

Flemming says this is the first time in the area that a coyote has been rabid; usually it's skunks or foxes. However, he doesn't think the incident has anything to do with last year's discontinuation of the wolf bounty.

"It's not because of the numbers of coyotes," he says. "I don't think (the absence of the bounty) has anything to do with it. We've only had one minor predator complaint (since the bounty was stopped.) We've always had coyotes here and this is just an isolated case. It's fairly unusual, but coyotes do get rabies."

The health unit would like to remind everyone that all owners of dogs or cats older than four months are required by law to vaccinate their pets against rabies. The next clinics are as follows: Haliburton Fire Hall,

October 14, 10 a.m. to 2 p.m.; Minden Animal Clinic, Bobcaygeon Road North, one mile north of Minden, October 14 and 21, 10 a.m. to 2 p.m.; and Wilberforce Fire Hall, October 21st, 10 a.m. to 2 p.m.

The fee is $8. Dogs must be on a leash, and cats should be in carriers.

Anyone spotting an animal acting in unusual ways are asked to contact the MNR at 286-1521. The other two coyotes have not been seen since last week's incidents and it is assumed they are now dead.

Neighbour charged with mischief

Police News

During the week of September 25 to October 1, officers of the Minden detachment investigated 74 general occurrences and 10 accidents with 7 persons injured.

CAUSES DISTURBANCE

Larry Ford-King, 21 of Horseshoe Lake, has been charged with Causing a Disturbance, after his drunken behaviour late Sat. Sept. 30 on Main Street, Minden.

MISCHIEF

William Edward Hamilton, 59, of Big Hawk Lake Road, has been charged with Mischief after ongoing problems. Hamilton is alleged to have been making an amount of noise with firearms and whistles, over an extended period of time, which was constantly keeping the neighbours awake. These and other mischievous acts, directed at neighbours, resulted in the charge.

FRAUD

Linda Shirley Woodburn, 24 of Carnarvon, has been charged with Fraud after an investigation involving an NSF cheque in the amount of $42.10.

FRAUDS

Police are presently investigating numerous cheques which have been passed in the county and are being returned NSF, NO ACCOUNT, or INSUFFICIENT FUNDS. Amounts range from $21. to several thousands of dollars. Store owners and others are reminded to ensure the identity of the cheque passer by means of a driver's licence. Record the licence number on the cheque for future references. Beware of large cheques passed after banking hours, or on out of town banks. Do not hesitate to confirm with the bank or agency to ensure the funds are available. Do not take post dated cheques. Finally, you are not obliged to take a cheque. Remember the money you loose is yours.

SEVEN INJURED IN TWO ACCIDENTS

Three people received injuries in a 2-car accident on Hwy. 35 and 118 on Sept. 27, Brenda Chambers of R.R. 2 Minden was north bound on Hwy. 35 entering the intersection when a vehicle operated by Wilbert Pash of England, which was south bound on Hwy. 35, turned left in front of Chambers. The three occupants of the 2 vehicles were taken to hospital by ambulance. Pash was charged with an improper left turn. Four persons were injured in a collision on Scotch Line Rd. east of Hwy. 35 on Sat. Sept. 30. The vehicles were operated by David Vavra of Uxbridge and Shane Clark of Minden, collided at the crest of a hill injuring all occupants of the Clark vehicle who were taken to Minden Hospital.

Students to learn of college

by SUSAN GROBER
Staff Reporter

Many high school students are afraid to enter community college. But a proposed program could help students alleviate these fears, says the director of education.

At last Tuesday's meeting of the Haliburton Board of Education, Stuart Baker presented a report on a recent meeting with Brian Desbiens, president of Sir Sandford

Fleming College, and board directors from the counties of Peterborough, Victoria, Hastings, and Northumberland to discuss an agreement whereby the college would provide a co-ordinator in the high schools for a six-month period.

Through this program, staff can "heighten enthusiasm and take away some of the mystique that community college holds," said Baker. "I'm proud to say this could be a very exciting endeavour."

Funding is being provided by the Ministry of Education for such ventures, where a college co-ordinator would make presentations to Grade 11 and 12 classes, promoting "the advantages of going to community college, explaining what it has to offer."

The co-ordinator would also speak with high school staff members to update them on current programs.

And subjects which are common to both the high schools and colleges would be reviewed, since a number of areas have been found to overlap, said Baker. "Many students have found some community college courses to be easy because they've already learned certain things at high school." These students are often accelerated in their college courses.

"Students speak with a good deal of bravado about school being easy, but they sometimes have trouble leaving Haliburton County (to attend school in Peterborough or Toronto) without a lot of concerns," he said.

Baker told trustees he finds this proposed program to be refreshingly different because it focuses on general level students.

"Too often we hear of general level students being left aside," he said. "Much attention has been paid to special education and enrichment students. If any group has been left without as much encouragement as others, it's these general level students."

Also mentioned was the "highly advanced" training available at community colleges, with Baker noting the robotics course by Sir Sandford in Peterborough.

Ministry funding must be requested for the program. Baker also said there is a possibility that Sir Sandford staff could offer courses to high school students, although the distance factor could be a problem.

Snowdon not listening to salvage yard complaints, residents protest township (which Simmons says is 10 pages long); clean up the wrecks which are presently on the property and not operate the lands until this is complied with; and to leave a deposit of $2,309.66 with the township, which includes outstanding taxes.

Simmons read this a first and second time, and said a third reading will be scheduled for council's next meeting. If the rezoning is passed, any members of the public who disagree can object to the Ontario Municipal Board (OMB). But opposing residents who live in the area didn't want to wait before voicing their objections.

"I can't believe council would even consider putting something like this in the beautiful area in which we live," said Jean Farrell. "I'm shocked."

"We have a township that won't even listen to the public," said Griffin. "The people have shown up to say we don't want it."

Griffin said the money requested from Linnington is "a drop in the bucket," but council explained the money is needed because the property is in arrears. Griffin then asked, "is this business going to bring much tax revenue in?"

Councillor Dwaine Wruth said the tax revenue cannot be estimated. "Then why do you want to allow this business," Griffin asked. "It's against everything the township should want."

"We don't necessarily want something like this," said councillor Al Jopling. "If you have objections, you have the right to stop it. But (Linnington) thinks that he is right."

"We're here to stop (approval for the yard) tonight," said Griffin. "Is bringing this in right?"

"The man wants to start a business," continued Jopling. "If anybody else here wanted to start one we'd give them the right to apply."

"We wanted to bring some progression into the area when we voted for you," Lou Weber said, addressing council. "What kind of progression is this? We're ending up with a wreckage yard in the neighbourhood."

Dalton Russell, who lives near Linnington's property, started the petition against the salvage yard proposal. "Everyone in the neighbourhood is against this," he said.

"Just considering the number of people here tonight to stop this, I can't see it going through," said Jopling.

Representatives from the South Lake Association of Cottagers and Residents (SLACAR) were also in attendance at the meeting, because they had concerns over a salvage yard in their area. Ken Brown, who is on the SLACAR executive, offered his support to opposing residents.

"Why would you want a salvage yard on the main road in Spowdon Township?" he asked.

"The problem is a salvage yard is exactly like a dump," said Reeve Simmons. "Nobody wants it, but it's a necessity."

"The question you have to ask is, where would you put a dump?" said Brown. "The size of the township is such that an offensive proposal like a salvage yard has no place here."

Later Simmons told the cottagers that council has placed a "cease and desist" order on the South Lake business, Gord Lyddiatt's towing services, because the property is improperly zoned. "South Lake Road was not intended to be a wrecking yard." When cars are towed away, they're held on that property, which must be cleaned up within 120 days.

Some residents arrived after Simmons read out the proposed zoning agreement, and asked it to be read out loud again. A few questioned why Linnington's property is in arrears. He explained this salvage yard proposal has involved about two years of planning and research. "I've waited so long for this rezoning that I told the clerk I wouldn't pay my last tax installment until I know where a stand."

Upon hearing that the vote supporting the motion was unanimous Griffin said, "we're possibly looking at a new council." This comment was greeted by applause.

"I don't think eight people can rule what we have in our community," said Mrs. Farrell. "If council isn't listening to the people who are here tonight, then we need a new council."

Ron Davidson, who lives next to the proposed salvage yard, said council doesn't seem to care about residents' concerns. "They're thinking with their feet instead of their brains."

Then several residents offered to chip in $100 each to pay for a lawyer to represent their concerns. A third reading of the rezoning bylaw is proposed for November 13, at 7 p.m. Upon a third reading, there is a 21-day appeal period where any objections will be collected at the township office and forwarded to the OMB.

A winner: Betty Pollard of Haliburton won this beautiful hand-made quilt in a recent raffle sponsored by the Haliburton County Alzheimer's Support Group, which met last Thursday at Extendicare. Second prize winner of a $50 gift certificate for the Sandalwood Gift Shop was Barbara Almeida of Burlington, while Pat Jaskula of Unionville won the $30 gift certificate for Dollo's IGA, also in Minden, and sponsor of the prize. Taking part in the draw were, from left: Henry Webert, who donated the quilt; Ann Wood, chairman of the steering committee; Peggy Pettinger; Bill Kleinschmidt, who in a mammoth effort, sold the vast majority of tickets; and Ed Pettinger. Elinor Kleinschmidt, not shown, donated the Sandalwood gift certificate. The draw raised $1,110 for the group, which invites new members to join. Outdoor skills will be the focus of new club at the high school

by SUSAN GROBER

Staff Reporter

The formation of an Outers Club will give students of Haliburton Highlands Secondary School the chance to develop camping, canoeing and hiking skills.

Organized by teachers Sharon Kehoe and Bruce Griffith, the club was given approval by the Haliburton County Board of Education at last Tuesday's meeting.

The program will aim "at developing knowledge and skills which would prepare club members to take part in an overnight hike later this fall," reads a letter to Education Director Stuart Baker from HHSS principal Peter Forgrave. "Rock climbing and white-water canoeing would not be included in the program" to ensure safety to students.

Restricted to students who demonstrate responsibility and dependability, the Outers Club meetings would be held at noon-hour and activities would be after school or on weekends. The school already has outdoor equipment, such as canoes, so no cost would be involved.

Both teachers are experienced in outdoor activities with young people, and have first aid and CPR (Cardio-Pulmonary Resuscitation) training, trustees were told. Kehoe has taken five high school groups out on overnight backpacking or canoeing trips, and has led a three-day winter camping trip.

Griffith is a former cub scout master who has led overnight and winter camping trips, has taught canoeing and has credentials in canoeing and swimming.

"Certainly, I support this venture as it will provide valuable, enjoyable experiences for our students and is indeed a 'natural' for our location," says Forgrave.

handle any more kindergarten classes.

"We're looking at studying the different grade levels, to see what problems we'll have down the road," said Murdoch.

This year the board was turned down by the Ministry of Education for building funds over the next three years. The question now is whether it should build on its own without provincial funding.

In order to get some idea of space problems caused by increasing enrollment, accommodation will be one of the items trustees will look at when they tour area schools on October 10.

homes of Mr. Dave Magee and Mr. Charlie Roberts. As a result he now feels the proposed parking area adjacent to these properties is inappropriate and should be edged with a buffer of shrubs or a landscaped berm such that these families would not suffer an invasion of their privacy being surrounded by a busy parking lot.

□ "At the time that he reviewed the proposal, (Lehman) was not aware that a family's home was situated directly across from the roadway to this complex. As a result, he now does not feel this would be an appropriate location for that roadway.

□ "Mr. Lehman feels that since St. Germaine Street is a dead end street, the second access roadway should not also be on that street if it is to be an effective entrance (since there would be no access for emergency services if there is blockage where St. Germaine meets Newcastle).

□ "Since there is a lack of park-land south of the Gull River, the development should provide park and playground facilities of its own.

□ "Depending on the type of commercial facilities to be included in this development, the required parking spaces would be a minimum of 25.

□ "Mr. Lehman was not aware that the property directly south of the proposal was inhabited. He understood that this land was vacant. It is, in fact, the home of Fred and Illa Cooper."

Some of these new findings contradict Lehman's previous recommendations on his planning report. "After learning this I wonder if Mr. Lehman would now have some further input for our council which would help them in reaching their decision," said Mrs. Wilson.

Councillor Mike Maher said the situation is "disturbing" and was angry that Lehman didn't present these concerns to council in the first place. "This undermines my confidence in Mr. Lehman," he said.

Mrs. Wilson explained that Lehman didn't understand the layout of the neighbourhood when preparing his original report on the development proposal. "I'm disturbed that Lehman wasn't aware of many aspects," said Maher. "I have serious concerns about this situation. He's not aware that the neighbourhood is a neighbourhood."

"The whole thing is misrepresentative," said councillor Bob Sisson, adding, "You've got to protect your existing ratepayer."

Speaking on behalf of Moore, consultant Barclay Taylor allowed residents to view preliminary plans of the development, sketch layouts of a typical floor in the condominium, and an artist's concept from aerial view, and suggested to council the proposal would be beneficial to the area.

Ms. Taylor pointed out the proposal has been approved in principle by the current and former councils, Planning Advisory Committees and that a meeting was held in July to obtain input from the public.

The public often fears that developments which proceed quickly don't address the concerns of the local municipality, Ms. Taylor, a former reeve of Fenelon Falls, said in her report. Procedures for property development under the Ontario Planning Act, Municipal Act and Condominium Act "contain many checks and balances to ensure that development proceeds in the interest of good planning for the community," she said.

The process, controlled by the province, takes a minimum time period of one year to 18 months. "I can assure you on behalf of your ratepayers that in 'condominium development' you can't proceed quickly by the very nature of the process," she said.

Ms. Taylor quoted from Lehman's original planning report, stressing that he supported the rezoning and official plan amendments for the development. Currently, the proposal site is zoned Village Residential, which only permits uses such as group homes, churches, libraries and schools; rezoning to Medium Density Residential would permit low-rise attached or stacked dwellings. However, official plan policies for Medium Density Residential states the maximum density permitted is 37 units per hectare. So an official plan amendment is also required to allow the proposed 56 units.

Concerns of council and residents about public services, traffic, parking and fire accessibility were addressed by Ms. Taylor. Through a report from Minden's Public Utilities Committee, and a discussion with the district Ministry of Environment, Ms. Taylor says the municipality is capable of providing sewer and water services to the condominiums. A development agreement between Moore and the municipality will provide for engineering and costs of the servicing.

Moore proposes to excavate the hill at Newcastle Street where up to 12 public parking spaces are needed for the commercial component. And access to the project on St. Germaine is proposed by means of two driveway entrances, paid for by Moore in accordance with Ministry of Transportation standards. Ms. Taylor said the development should generate a traffic flow of about 102 a day, which "certainly isn't excessive."

Buildings will be constructed and equipped in accordance with fire code requirements contained in the building code, vehicle access will accommodate emergency vehicles and water supply is adequate, Ms. Taylor said.

Interior and exterior parking will be available on the site. And Moore has proposed to purchase and close a portion of an unopened road allowance of Milne Street.

Representing families who own property adjacent to or nearby the proposed condominium site, the Wilsons approached council with a "Presentation of Rate-Payers Pleaded With Current Zoning and Density Bylaws."

"I do not envy your position as you are the judge and the jury in this case," Mr. Wilson told council. "You will have to review all of the facts... Our whole intent is to keep the discussion at this level and to stay out of an OMB hearing."

Using colourful, detailed graphics and maps, the Wilsons presented information gathered from deeds at the registry office.

Quoting a section of Minden's zoning bylaw, Mr. Wilson said, "it is the municipality's responsibility to ensure that the use made of a parcel of land does not cause problems for adjacent users."

"It is the strong belief of all those persons represented here tonight that not only will the proposed development have a major impact on our neighbourhood, it is also not in keeping with the intent of our 'new' planning document, Bylaw 86-26."

Residents purchased or built homes in the area looking for a "quiet, residential neighbourhood," said Mr. Wilson. "Our group is not against development. We have always welcomed new neighbours and the construction of new homes in our area. We would be more than happy to welcome the construcreflects Minden's current and future need. This document is not ancient or out of date, rather it was just passed by council."

If rezoning is allowed, a message will be sent to Minden residents and future developers that, "It does not matter in what type of residential zone you live, or intend to live, at any time a portion of your neighbourhood can be changed to intensive, multi-unit (56-100-20-??? units) residential with some commercial units."

"Today your neighbour is a single family residence like your own, tomorrow it's a 56 unit complex with commercial facilities," said Mr. Wilson. "This is exactly what's being proposed in our neighbourhood. Can you honestly say that you

'Our group is not against development,' says Wayne Wilson. But Moore's proposed condominiums would be "just like placing the entire Mackayville subdivision on one hectare of land."

tion" of single-family homes on Moore's property in keeping with the current bylaws. The group's concern is that a condominium would drastically "change and adversely impact our neighbourhood."

Mr. Wilson said Moore's development "will be just like placing the entire Mackayville subdivision (which has 59 homes) on one hectare of land (2.5 acres) inside our neighbourhood..."

"This development would mean a 550 per cent increase in traffic flow, and all other residential activities," said Mr. Wilson. "However, the overall area of our neighbourhood has not changed. In fact, it will have decreased due to the construction of the commercial units and associated parking."

The spot rezoning, or "random changing," from rural and residential to intensive multi-unit residential with commercial uses will set a major precedent, Mr. Wilson said. "Considerable time and energy was spent" by planner Lehman when he consulted with residents and council to develop and prepare the municipality's planning document, "which would accept or expect anyone to accept this change?

"If this development is approved, then all residents can expect to have intensive, multi-unit complexes, R-3, randomly placed within their residential, first density, neighbourhoods."

Mr. Wilson outlined what residents feel will be direct impacts to the neighbourhood resulting from the development. These include traffic, noise, loss of privacy, creation of a new major intersection, a huge parking lot, changes to the natural watercourse and possible flooding.

Economic, social and environmental impacts to the community would include an increased demand for sewer and water services, hospitals, employment, emergency services, and parks and playgrounds. Also, the local Archie Stouffer Elementary School is overcrowded at eight classes over capacity, so this service must be looked into, said Mr. Wilson. After addressing concern over services such as garbage collection and snow removal, Mr. Wilson was told

THIS WEEK

Starting over: The old winter vault at the Evergreen Cemetery in Haliburton had to be demolished after a car left the Harburn Road and crashed into it a few weeks ago. Tenders are now out for a new building, which is expected to cost $40,000. Dysart believes the car driver's insurance should pay for the costs.

BOE hires 2 more teachers

have been identified as having learning difficulties, and "they need some withdrawal time from the regular classroom and a teacher to assist with their exceptionalities," Robinson said.

The assistant could also answer phone calls, said Robinson. Since the school's new principal, Ted Glendinning, also teaches kindergarten, it's difficult for him to leave these younger pupils to handle phone matters. "It can really disrupt a class if you leave younger children for even a few minutes," he said.

At Haliburton's Victoria Street School, and its kindergarten class at Sir Sandford Fleming College's Lakeview campus, there is a problem with noon-hour supervision, Robinson added. In a first step to alleviate this problem, new principal Michael Burke has suggested that lunch hours be staggered. Two educational assistants working 4.5

hours each day could provide supervision during lunch hours at both the schools, and then help at Lakeview, which is "small and quite crowded" with 82 students. "They could be an extra set of eyes and hands to help manage the space problem there," he said.

With space problems at both Minden and Haliburton schools, Robinson was asked if there would be room to add new staff members. "There is room," he answered. "It won't be ideal room, but it can be done." Classrooms normally used for specialized subjects such as family studies are being used to house regular classes.

Baker added that grant money is given for low PTRs. The board tries to keep classes from kindergarten to Grade 2 down to 22 pupils, so it will be eligible for a $250 grant per child from the Ministry of Education.

When the PTR is calculated, all teaching staff (including principals and librarians) are counted, trustees were told. Trustees voted unanimously to hire the proposed new staff members.

Accident trial delayed

The trial over the accidental death of Fred Bordyniuk has been remanded for at least a month.

In August, 1988, Bordyniuk was killed when the manlift he was working on tipped over and dropped him to the ground. Since then, the Ministry of Labour has laid charges against some of his employers (Combi Board of Bancroft) and people responsible for the maintenance of the manlift.

The first court appearance was scheduled for September 26 in Bancroft. The next court date has not been set yet.

Stripper rumour raises ire

by SUSAN GROBER

Staff Reporter

A woman angered over rumours that strippers will be brought to the Gelert Gardens restaurant has approached Snowdon Council for its support.

Lou Weber lives across the road from the restaurant with sons, Andre and Max, and husband Norm. Mrs. Weber attended Monday's council meeting and requested that something be done to stop the owners from bringing in female strippers. The restaurant owners recently asked the Liquor Licensing Board whether their permit would allow strippers.

"I don't want to live across the street from a strip joint," she said. "Do they have the right to bring in strippers?"

"Is this considered a good thing for the township? We've had enough problems lately with thefts, break-ins and damages on our property.

We have higher taxes, less garbage service, and now this is being proposed.

"This isn't the kind of thing I want for my family."

Reeve George Simmons said at present the stripper proposal is "just speculation." But Mrs. Weber insisted upon immediate action. "I don't want to have to come back after the fact to fight this."

Council was asked to have the township's solicitor look into drawing up a bylaw to prohibit strippers

Delegations to BOE to have 30-minute limit

by SUSAN GROBER

Staff Reporter

A time limit will now be set for those who wish to make presentations to the Haliburton County Board of Education.

At last Tuesday's board meeting, trustees voted to place the time restriction, limiting delegations to 30 minutes at the committee level and 15 minutes at the board level.

Trustee Nancy Stinson had difficulty with the guideline. "We should ask each delegation how much time they think they need."

Another concern came from trustee Len Salvatori, who disagreed with having any delegations at the committee level. "Sometimes there are regional problems that can't be handled fairly at the committee level. If people come as a delegation, the whole board should hear them."

Trustee Tim Casey wanted to ensure the board remains accessible to the public. The first time Casey approached the board, "everyone seemed to be in an ivory tower. I don't want this to be a hard and fast rule, otherwise we're out of touch with what people want in our small communities."

Board chairman Wendy Ladurantay ensured trustees the time limit only provides a guideline for those organizing their presentations, and members can vote for an extension if more time is needed.

Planner to be consulted about condos

these would be paid for by condominium residents.

Ms. Taylor said the Wilsons should be congratulated for their presentation. "I don't think it makes this meeting confrontational. I think it's the right way to solve problems."

Stressing that she is not a planner, and therefore cannot suggest specific remedies, Ms. Taylor said "a lot of your concerns can be resolved through a site plan agreement" between Moore and the municipality.

She said the increase in traffic would not necessarily come to 550 per cent, since "early retired people or seniors who would reside in the development are within pedestrian distance and won't take their cars out." This comment was greeted by laughter and jeers from the residents.

Privacy could be handled through proper landscaping and grading. This matter and that of adequate access would be controlled through the site plan agreement.

Increased services such as hospital and ambulance will come with more residents, Ms. Taylor said, and the rear part of the complex is "a treat area" for recreation facilities.

Deputy Reeve Bern Berry put forth a resolution to contact Lehman about his comments and recommendations on the project, and request that he look over the site proposed for development.

Council will again review the proposal during the October 26 meeting at 7:30 p.m.

Whose interest?

Flood plain mapping in Dysart and the restrictions on property development that accompany them, raise the difficult question — frequently heard in relation to a whole range of government regulations — of where individual rights end and the rights of society begin. Does ownership of property bring with it the right to use and alter that property in any way the owner sees fit? Or is there a higher priority than that of the individual, and when should it take precedence?

The question is significant with respect to flood plain regulations, because they impose restrictions on development which are seldom popular, and frequently costly for property owners. At worst, the regulations accompanying a flood plain designation can limit the uses to which an owner can put a property — curtailing the development of a plan of subdivision on a large acreage, for example — lowering that property's value. Even when uses are not so restricted, a flood plain designation can create problems for property owners who wish to expand their place of business or add onto their home. If it is reasonable to try to define what kind of construction and development should take place on a vacant piece of land which may be subject to flooding, is it equally reasonable to impose restrictions on existing homes and commercial buildings? If people are aware that a property might flood at some time in the future, even if it never has in the remembered past, why shouldn't they be allowed to make a choice about where and what to build, since only they and not society as a whole will suffer if the land floods?

The premise that underlies flood plain restrictions is that the good of society is served by limiting the rights of individuals to build where and how they wish. Partly this is an economic argument. If there is a serious flood and property is extensively damaged, the process of cleanup and reconstruction inevitably places demands on the public purse. Flooding might also result in environmental damage and health risks — if septic beds are washed out, for example — and society should, as far as possible, be protected from these.

Unfortunately, flood plain mapping, at least as it is being done at present in local municipalities, is at best an inexact science, carried out by planners who use aerial photography as their primary source of information. It would be prohibitively expensive to survey and walk every foot of every watercourse to determine where and how high water would flow if a hurricane were to strike this part of Ontario, as hurricane Hazel did in 1954. But if that is not done, the flood plain boundaries will always be open to question.

The reasoning behind flood plain mapping is sound, and the collective good of society is served by restricting development in areas that are demonstrably prone to flooding. Unfortunately there are many areas of debate, both in the process and in the maps themselves, and few people are likely to be passively accept regulations that compromise their individual rights.

A solution

It is becoming increasingly apparent that the Haliburton County Board of Education will have to seriously consider the prospect of building new classroom space entirely with local tax dollars. Enrollment continues to swell, while the Ministry of Education assigns a higher financial priority to other areas of the province, where the space crunch is even more acute.

Trustees will be understandably reluctant to place the burden of new construction costs entirely on the backs of area property owners, but their decision would be made easier if the Ministry of Education was prepared to assign funding priorities and stick to them. If, for example, the province said Haliburton County could get capital; funding for classrooms five years hence, the local board might be prepared to go ahead and build the classrooms, knowing that eventually, provincial taxes would offset a portion of the cost.

Such medium term planning could do much to ensure that local students are adequately accommodated while concerns of local taxpayers are also assuaged.

Trying to read between reeve's lines

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Our readers write...

To the Editor:

I read with great interest the articles re the proposed changes some people wish to see made in Minden (Mount Minden). I hope all of your readers took the time to read them again and a second time and understand what was between the lines.

Last week in your "letters to the Editor" section, there was a letter from Mr. Moore, our current Reeve. Perhaps I'm not talking to the same people he is, i.e. the ones he learns so much from. I'm not sure what the point of his letter was, even after reading it a second time. However I believe in some obscure manner he was trying to make some remarks about the articles I mentioned earlier in my letter. I guess we again must read between the lines—but he has left so many gaps, I really didn't get his point at all.

Respectfully,

Francine Newton,

Good business

To the Editor:

As a woman in small business operating in the county of Haliburton, I would like to thank you for the support you have given me by your recent coverage on the opening of my new branch office in Minden, and our computer network system.

Susan Grober's coverage was excellent, and certainly her attitude and interest both reflect the community's interest and concern, that we as a geographical area must continue to grow and remain competitive in the services we offer.

Often in the newspapers we all read about why our government advocates the development of small business in Canada, why it is crucial to our economy and our employment. All too often small businesses are being faced with higher taxes and multi-faceted burdens by this same government, sometimes making the plight of our careers rather difficult, to say the least.

Once again, Haliburton County is promoting its businesses through a private newspaper, which understands and cares. I can't tell you how encouraging and refreshing this is.

Sincerely,

Retiree protests GST

To the Editor:

As a retiree, I recompiled my 1988 income and expense in detail to determine the impact of GST. I also checked with Revenue Canada's GST Technical Paper and info line to ensure GST tax exemptions and low income tax credit were correct for my calculations.

Based on the 2.5 percent one-time inflation, 9 percent GST and the supposed offsetting low-income tax credit, this tax will cost me an additional $1100 annually. This is an additional 29 percent on current income taxes.

People had better write their MP right now and protest loudly, or pay thousands for their silence in the coming years.

This is a land of rolling hills, deep woods and many lakes.
I hear the loon's cry, the beaver's splash, a bird's song.
They bring such peace.
This setting sun.

Stirs the imagination and renews the spirit.
My canoe glides silently over the clear waters.
Oh, lay me down to rest among these hills and lakes.

IF THERE WAS EVER A TIME when the people of Haliburton County should feel optimistic, that time is now. In my opinion there was never a time when we have had so much to look forward to. Everyone who wants to work can find a job, new houses, cottages and business establishments are being constructed at a fast rate, everyone seems to have money in their pockets and did you ever see so many people driving new cars and trucks around town? It would appear that some of the local contractors may have to turn work away this coming winter. When you look around the villages and towns in Haliburton County, especially Haliburton and Minden and note the many new businesses that have been started and new houses presently under construction, one can see why the local economy is better than ever. The only problem at the present time seems to be shortage of help in the construction trade and at the retail store level. This can possibly be annoying to some people, but to others, it is a sign that prosperity is just around the corner.

Here, there and everywhere... The Lindsay Central exhibition attracted a large number of people from Haliburton County... Roberts-Austin Fuels is now operating out of its spanking new building in the Industrial Park. The new office features offices, two-bay garage and a showroom... Visitors as well as local citizens are wondering if the local council will get around to putting up much needed traffic lights at the corner of Highland Street and Cedar Avenue in downtown Haliburton... It's now practically impossible to launch a boat into the waters of Head Lake in the village of Haliburton. This is a federal matter and we'll have to get after the powers that be in the Federal Government and see if we can get some action and the ramp repaired at the local government dock. This is one of only two places on the entire lake chain where public boat launching is possible! A stag party was held for Michael Varty on Saturday evening, September 23rd. He was married last weekend... Did you know that the man who wrote the words for that well known hymn "What A Friend We Have In Jesus" once resided in Lindsay?... The Junior and Senior football teams have swung into action and both clubs have played their first two league games one day last week... The Haliburton Senior Curling Club welcomed new members with a Wine and Cheese Party held at the Curling Club on Thursday, September 28... If you have any old photos around your home that would be suitable for our Pic of the Past we would appreciate it if you would drop them off at the Echo office... Did you know that alcohol was involved in approximately 50 percent of all fatal accidents?

All senior citizens are reminded that now is the time to protect yourself from influenza this winter. Free Flu vaccine is available from your Doctor. Call for an appointment. This is a reminder from your Haliburton, Kawartha Pine Ridge District Health Unit. For more information call 457-1391.

Congratulations to Rizpah Elstone who celebrated her 103rd birthday with members of her family and friends in the activity room at Extencicare on Monday, September 25th.

Local congregations of Jehovahs were among the 926 who assembled recently for their two-day circuit assembly, held at their Assembly Hall in Norval. The assembly theme "Keep Watching How You Walk" featured demonstrations, talks, interviews and skits to help Jehovahs people maintain their spiritual balance and keep their integrity. The principle speaker was Richard Toews, district overseer for this area. His main discourse on the Sunday afternoon entitled "Light bearers in a Dark World" was of special interest to newly interested ones as well as those who are already serving as ministers. Nine newly dedicated ones symbolized their ordination as ministers by water baptism.

The citizens of the village of Haliburton and surrounding area should be mighty proud of one of the main industries we have going for us in the name of Picard and Holden, Truss Manufacturing which is in the Industrial Park at Haliburton. This local industry has been going ahead by leaps and bounds and it seems that almost every month a new expansion is underway with many people being employed there and extra shifts have been put on in an effort to look after the extra business. They are not only manufacturing trusses for use in Canada, but now they are shipping them around the world.

The Haliburton County Home Support Services Autumn Newsletter '89 reports that it is holding a workshop on the subject of Depression to be held on October 11 at the Haliburton County Home Support Services Drop-In-Centre at Haliburton. Guest speaker Wayne Casey has a M.S.W. degree and 16 years' experience, with the last four years spent working with the elderly. He will speak on signs to look for, how to spot depression and how to deal with it. This workshop is free to volunteers, with refreshments being provided.

Clarke

IN THE PAST, I have taken the first column in October to review the past year, since it is the anniversary of my first appearance in The Echo, four years ago. The Tuna Scandal seems so far in the past now...

This year, things are a little different. Today is the sixtieth anniversary of me — birthdays they call them — and I find that it seems to be on my mind.

I don't know why we put more emphasis on the 30s, 40s and 50s, than we do on the 32nd, 43rd or 56th birthdays or anniversaries, but people seem to — 25th and 50th anniversaries excepted.

Generally speaking, while I enjoy looking back for interesting or amusing things from the past — especially for this column — I tend to spend most of the days of my life looking forward to things in the future.

Sometimes they are responsibilities, things with deadlines to be met, but more often these days they are things I'm looking forward to like an event — a trip or a visit with a friend.

But with this particular birthday, I do find I am looking back and measuring things against the years. For instance, it is almost 40 years that I asked my wife out for our first date. That covers two-thirds of my life right there. (The little gray-haired lady I help across the streets — is my wife!)

We've been coming to Haliburton — or living here — for more than a quarter of my life. It's something I never sort of added up until I found myself in this unusually analytical mood.

I've been writing for three-quarters of my life, have been involved in advertising for two-thirds of it, including broadcasting for half of it, working more than a third of my life for just one radio station.

One of the laugh lines about age I came across recently said you know you're growing old when "you reach the top of the ladder and you discover it was leaning against the wrong wall." Whoever wrote that must have worked for McLean Hunter, too.

Another one said you'd know "when your children start to look middle-aged." Mine don't quite look that old yet, but I find it rather profound to realise that my youngest daughter is older now than I was when she was born...

Frankly, birthdays have never bothered me. I can't remember any particular trauma to being 30, or 40, or 50. (I can remember when my oldest son started saying never trust anyone UNDER 30, though). Today I really can't recall any emotional reaction to these previous decade markers.

Pic of the Past

Well, we don't know where this picture was taken (we think it's downtown Haliburton) or who these two gentlemen are. Nor do we have insight into whether they're smiling over the contents of the barrel. Country yokel image must change

THROUGH THE PERISCOPE

Martha Perkins

OTHER MEDIA HAVE YET TO catch on to the fact that small town demographics are changing. The hitherto popular image which mixes a little bit of Susannah Moodie (the pioneer settler who wrote Roughing it in the Bush) with a dash of Deliverance (the movie about men going into hillbilly country, where everyone is inbred and without any moral code) a hefty dollop of derision, and the rose tinge of romanticism, has lost its nostalgic bloom.

Or has it? We all know from experience that small towns can be dynamic, progressive places where former city sophisticates blend in harmoniously with oldtimers who can remember the arrival of flush toilets and electricity. (I have been in houses which still do not have the former.) Stereotypes have to be destroyed, because no one is stereotypical anymore.

So if a radio or television crew, or a newspaper reporter, were to come up here to try to get a sense of the community, where do you think they should go? The art gallery? A council chamber? The arena during a hockey game? The community centre?

A CBC radio reporter doing a Sunday Morning documentary on the new Darlington nuclear reactor recently asked this question in Newcastle. His answer: A country and western bar. The farmer dressed in overalls riding into town on his tractor was replaced by the NDP's infamous ordinary man.

It would be like going to the Rockcliffe on a Friday afternoon and believing you were putting your sensors on the pulse of the community. You would discover certain truths here, valid ones; but your image would be two-dimensional, lacking depth. You'd also be perpetuating certain myths.

Most of the people I've met live here because of the lifestyle it offers: the nature, the beauty, the stillness of the night; the friendliness, the sense of belonging, the ability to make a difference; the slower pace, the removal of many man-made stresses, the privacy.

In other words, people have actually chosen to live here. They could find jobs in the city if they wanted to, but they don't want to. Young and old, local and from away, professionals and labourers—they have made a conscious, yes, even sane, decision to live north of the 401.

We've all met the city person who doesn't believe this. They're the ones who are still caught up in the time warp that says bigger is better, you work your way up in the world by moving from village to town to city, with New York being the pinnacle of success. You live here because you can't make it in the city, right?

On the other hand, I'm not sure whether it's necessarily good for people to live in small towns all of their lives. Security is one thing, but hiding behind things which are familiar to you is another. One of the things which scared me about the Lord's Prayer issue was this craving for homogeneity; non-acceptance of those things which were different. Prejudice is easily hidden in small towns because everyone can be the same.

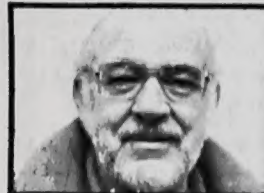

You can decide that small towns are the life for you, but taste a little of what the city has to offer first. Travel across Canada and abroad whenever possible, enrich yourself with other cultures, languages and histories. Bring those experiences back to the small town, and work to make it an even better place.

And don't create new stereotypes about people who live in the city. It's very easy to fall into the trap of believing everyone who lives in Toronto is haughty, snobbish, over-dressed, burnt out by stress, on drugs, out of tune with the natural world and somehow different from the people who live in the country. What is Toronto, if not in part a collection of people who grew up in small towns?

What I'd like to see is the banishment of stereotypes altogether. We deserve honest portrayals of country and city life, not the easy and glib stock characters. Nice people can live in cities, and intelligent people can live in the country. Let's clean up the language we're hearing which slots us all into neat little compartments, and be proud of our diversity.

The new consumer work ethic

AS OTHERS SEE IT

Bob

THE SIGN ON THE TELEPHONE POLE read: "Jobs for Teens." Below was: "$TeenAgers 12-16, earn $60.00 to $100.00 a week. Work part-time, after school and Saturday. $Call . . . I've been trying to call the number for some time but it is always busy. When I get the electronic answering service, there is no room on the tape for my message. Kids are calling by the hundreds."

I'm not a teenager, but I am very interested in what is happening to our kids and what kind of influence we are having on them.

Last winter, while wandering the malls in the city, I was suddenly struck by the fact that the majority of employees were sleepy-eyed kids. Small shops were sometimes totally operated by very young people. Food service outlets are especially kit-operated. I hear that these jobs are called 'Mac-Jobs!'

What's going on? It sure looks to me like children are being manipulated and exploited by the high-profit consumer oriented society we cherish so deeply. Shop owners and business franchises depend on the no-benefit, minimum wage, part time employee in order to keep their profit margin high. Kids are being taught, not to work, but to earn to consume, which makes everyone happy.

Recent studies show that half of the high school students in the cities have part time, evening and Saturday jobs. They go from school to work and come home too weary to study or play. I was walking behind a young couple one evening and heard her say, while holding tightly to his hand, "Look Ross, I get up at six, do my homework, go to school at eight, then straight to work, I work until cleanup is done at ten, and then I come home. I'm sorry we can't get together more. Sunday is all I've got." She couldn't have been more than sixteen. Ross was wondering about the heart that had to wait, no doubt, endless hours. That little lady must have been a ball of fire in the classroom!

It has always been understood that the exploitation of children by industry and business is a sign of a culture gone mad! When adult profits, usually exorbitant profits, begin to take advantage of teenagers, our greed has overstepped its limit. I noticed this summer in Haliburton that the same practice is sweeping the tourist industry as well. Kids were everywhere.

I am sure that neither kids nor parents will thank me for objecting to this growing practice. Materialistic parents, who are proud of kids who can consume and who believe that their kids are learning important work habits, are most happy to take them to work and pick them up at all hours of the day or night. Not to mention the fact that most of us think that if a kid has a job and is at work they are staying out of trouble.

My kids would tell you that that was my only solution to every problem, no matter was the problem was: "Get a job", I'd bark. I repent in sack cloth and ashes. I now see that for what it is. Kids are

NORTHERN LIGHTS

Virginia Muenzel

THERE COULDN'T HAVE BEEN anyone in town Saturday. They were all either on the Studio Tour or at one of the weddings of the year. Some even made a vain effort to do both. And that seemed to be the topic of conversation among many people.

Time, time, time, where does the time go? It seems that all of us folks who live in 'what-do-you-do-up-there?' land, don't have enough time to do it in. There's just too much to do. We constantly find ourselves needing a couple of more hours in the day, another day in the week. Another month before winter sets in. We could also use a good dose of stamina to get us through the time we have, let alone that which we need to add on.

And the weekends! There are the friends and relatives who come up to visit from the city. (We must need some company.) There's all the big dos, like weddings, anniversary parties, birthdays, and holidays, there's all the fun things going on, the Studio Tours, flea markets, yard sales, fashion shows, Blue Grass Festivals, etc. And we always seem to have the need to be in two places at the same time, because we don't want to miss any of the neat events.

Somewhere along the way, we're supposed to get a mess of weekend chores done. The two-people jobs. We haven't got the garden ready for winter yet. At least three major projects aren't quite finished, and frankly, we'd love to just go out and drift across the lake in the canoe that's been sitting unused for two months. Where does the time go?

There just happened to be several writers on the same premises the other day. We were trying to find the time to reform our group. A couple of years back we had a super writers' group. We had great times, and we helped each other. But it fell apart simply due to the lack of time. Last week a woman called me looking for the opportunity to get into such a group to give her some direction. I suspect she may have been referred to more than a couple of people who each said we'd love to do the group, if we could find the time.

I even discovered that I'm not the only one who is hungry to do everything, see everything. Who has to sit down more and more frequently to list priorities, give up half of what I'd like to do, because frankly, I'd fall asleep half way through the list if I didn't.

Worst of all, every so often it dawns on us that we haven't seen the grandchildren or our kids for a couple of weeks, or a month, and the kids they will have grown. (Well, hopefully not the kids.) We try to get together, and discover that they're as busy as we are.

There's just not enough time.

Tuning in to today's television

OFF THE RECORD

Susan

PEOPLE TRY TO put us down, but that's just because we watch too much television. Yes, I'm talking about my generation. Those of us in our early twenties were weaned on a steady diet of re-runs during our formative years. But what are today's children tuning into?

Afternoon discussions in my grade school centred around that day's episode of the Flinstones, a stone-age satire on the Honeymooners. Everyone at St.

Andrew's Public School watched the Bedrock buddies while at home on their lunch hour, but I always pitied my best friend Colleen who went to St. Rose of Lima Catholic School.

She couldn't go home for lunch because her school was too far away, so she missed the noon-hour antics of Fred and Barney. She never knew the joys facing Wilma and Betty as they yelled "Charge it!" before a major shopping spree. She never grooved to the Wayouts, requested a wish from the Great Gazoo or idolized actors Cary Granite, Stoney Curtis, Ann-Margrock and Rock Hudson.

Sure, the Flintstones were on at other times during the day, but nothing could match that lunch-hour fix.

After school Colleen and I would get together to

DOWN OUR ROAD

SHE HAD NEVER BEEN CONTENT to accept things as they were. It used to get her into a lot of trouble when she was young. The teacher, a stern and unbending creature with not an ounce of humour, dubbed her 'Miss Why' and tried to hold her endless curiosity up to ridicule in front of the class. Undaunted, she simply lifted her chin and asked why she was at school if not to learn the 'why' of everything possible.

Stubborn, oh she was stubborn as well. Some would use the word persistent but in truth she was both. Once she got an idea she would hang on to it no matter the obstacles. Others may try to dissuade her but always without success. As a result, she sometimes came crashing down in a painful heap of disappointment when an idea did not work out. She'd slip away into her shell for a while, lick her wounds, most of which involved her pride, then come back out to face the world with a bold and open outlook once again.

Time passed, she married and raised a family. Life was good to her for she had married a smart and energetic man who was able to keep up with her. Financially she had nothing to worry about and although the old pep was still there, most of her energy was centred around her husband, children and church work. This was as expected of a woman of her background and she found it comfortable.

It was a close one, but the Redmen lose it

A first blow befalls HHSS seniors when Fenelon Falls wins 7 to 6

It's the final minute of play and your football team is trailing 7-6. You're deep in your opponents' zone, but facing third down and long yardage. A punt will produce a one point safety and tie the game, but you can win it with a field goal. Do you take the sure point or gamble on the win?

That was the dilemma facing Redmen football coach Gary Brohman last Friday in Fenelon Falls. Brohman chose to go for the win, but the field goal try was blocked and the Redmen went home with their first defeat of the season against a team which had never been particularly troublesome in past encounters.

Redmen supporters were second guessing the field goal decision even before the snap was bobbled, but coach Brohman said he took the gamble because his team came to win, not to play for a tie.

The missed field goal was only one of the setbacks the Redmen faced in a game that had more than its share of frustrations for the coaching staff and players alike.

The Redmen started out strongly, although Fenelon's offense showed it was able to move the ball downfield early, and continued to do so throughout the game. The Redmen went ahead 6-0 in the first half on a touchdown by Darren Danylyshen, but the convert was missed.

Controversy flared in the final minute of the half. With Haliburton in possession of the ball and the minute flag newly raised, the Redmen thought they had at least two plays to try for a TD, after which a punt would have produced an almost certain safety. But the referee ruled the half was over after only one Redmen play, a decision that sent Brohman and assistant coach Tim Davies out onto the field to lodge a protest, all to no avail, however.

In the second half Fenelon took control, and late in the game, they plunged over for a touchdown that put them ahead by one point.

Then came Haliburton's last minute chance for a field goal that was blocked almost before it got off the ground, and the loss was assured.

Despite the score, the Redmen offense was strong, rolling up a total of 220 yards rushing.

The Redmen's cause was not helped by the loss of punter and receiver Brent Flood, who suffered a mild concussion on the first play of the game and sat out the rest of the game on medical advice.

Craig Smith was particularly noteworthy on the defensive squad.

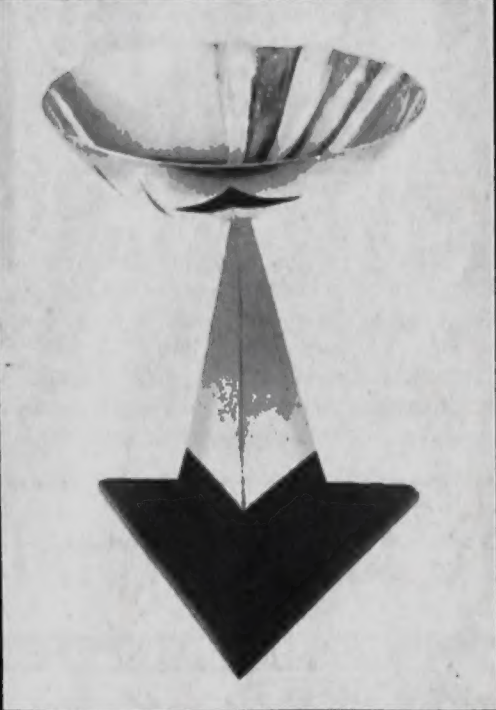

This Friday the senior redmen will meet I.E. Weldon on the HHSS field, with the opening kickoff set for 1:30 p.m.

LCVI loses attempt to topple Senior Redmen soccer team

Haliburton's senior Redmen soccer team put on an impressive show of ball control last Wednesday, netting five goals against the visiting Lindsay Collegiate club and winning by a two goal margin.

The Redmen played strongly in the first half, with Jan Haedicke netting two goals for Haliburton despite a wind disadvantage.

At the half the Redmen appeared poised to put the game out of LCVI's reach, and they did exactly that, netting three more goals as Haedicke drove in his third of the game and Darren Warburton and Mark Sorenson each notched singles to give the home team a 5-1 lead.

LCVI did not give up however, and came back to challenge Haliburton, moving to within two goals late in the game. David Kinsella made an outstanding save on a penalty kick with five minutes remaining to ensure the Redmen held on to their two goal lead.

The team is improving its discipline and ball control each week, and should be able to add more victories as the season continues.

Outstanding players in the 5-3 win over LCVI were Darnell Francis, Kelly Youngdale, Cecil Smith, Darren Warburton and Jan Haedicke.

This Wednesday the Redmen are at home once again, meeting Fenelon Falls in a return match of the season opener.

Juniors take loss

The Junior soccer team was unable to contain an aggressive Lindsay team last Wednesday, coming out on the short end of a 3-1 score. Play was even in the first half but the second half belonged to the visitors, who beat the Redmen to the ball on goal kicks and free kicks.

Dave Carr scored the only Redmen goal on a penalty shot. The Redmen had a number of chances in the first half but were unable to put the ball past the LCVI goal keeper. Solid play from Bruce Milne in the Haliburton net kept the local boys in the game. Jason Donaldson, Jamie Keefer and Darren Parsons played particularly well for Haliburton.

The juniors will play Fenelon this Wednesday afternoon on the HHSS field.

Junior Redmen beat Fenelon Falls, 12-0

The Junior Redmen came up with an outstanding effort in Fenelon to win 12-0. The offense was led by Jerry Cooper who rushed for 250 yards and notched to touchdowns in the first half. Craig Harding also was effective on the ground, rushing for 100 yards.

On the defensive side, Chris Greenfield was a standout.

Coach Brohman said he was very pleased with the turnaround in the juniors' play.

Both Redmen teams will be looking for wins this Friday when they take on I.E. Weldon at home. The Junior game is scheduled to get underway at 3:30 p.m.

Haliburton Redmen soccer forward Cecil Smith fends off a Lindsay Collegiate attacker during home game action last Wednesday. The Redmen were impressive, earning a 5-3 win.

HHSS girls' field hockey team show they know how to score—and often Haliburton high school's girls field hockey team got their regular season off to an impressive start last Tuesday, battling a strong Thomas A. Stewart team to a scoreless tie, and sending LCVI home with a defeat.

Thomas A. Stewart has consistently been COSSA champion, and Haliburton has never defeated them, so the scoreless tie was a particularly impressive performance for the local girls.

The game started slowly, with Haliburton's defense showing their strength in the early minutes. The game developed into an evenly matched affair, and ended in a scoreless draw. Melanie Duchene earned the shutout in the Haliburton net.

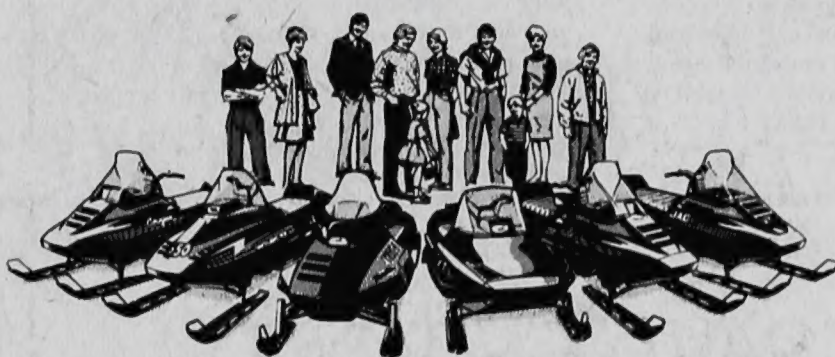

In the second game of the day, the local girls proved they knew how to score, as they drove in four goals in the first quarter, three by Abby Burk on crosses from Shannon Curry, and one by Jennifer Brydon, assisted by Tanya Woodcock.

Haliburton continued their scoring push for the rest of the match, adding goals by Nicki Vachon, and by Ursula Beachli and Laura Patton, who combined to push in the rebound off a shot by Melanie Duchene.

Janna Obee and Melanie Duchene shared the shutout for Haliburton.

The team will be back in action again this Thursday at home as the regular season continues.

Still the years sent by. The children grew up and moved away. One day she woke up to find herself a widow with plenty of time on her hands and nowhere to put it. Materially, she lacked nothing. But she wasn't happy. Never one to be idle and loving nothing better than a challenge, she decided to launch her life into a whole new direction.

She started buying and selling property. It was scary at first but with experience her confidence grew. This gave her a nice little sum with which to begin stage two of her grand plan. Now she was only interested in one particular property and whenever anything in that area came up for sale, she bought it. Sometimes she would have to wait a long time before she was able to make the transaction. Other times she had to be prepared to move very quickly or she would lose out. Timing was everything and she became a master of it.

It had started one sunny afternoon when she was out for a stroll with the dog. In those days she had been doing a lot of walking. It burned up some of her pent-up energy and soothed the spirit as only a good tramp through the bush can. Taking a different path, she came upon a place that was new to her. At the end of a clump of trees the land opened out into a huge meadow. A small lake sparkled in the sunshine and all around gentle hills rolled to the horizon. She found it amazing that although she had lived there most of her life, she had never realized such a pretty place existed so close to town. That's when her idea was born.

"Mother, what on earth are you talking about?" her son had asked when she first told him of her plan. "You know nothing about developing property. It will take years. And first you have to own the land, which you don't." "I don't yet," she replied, "but I will." Her son just shook his head, wondering is the death of his father had affected his mother's judgement. He had heard of the toll grief can take on a person.

Not discouraged, she had plowed full steam ahead. Curled up on the sofa, the dog at her feet that sunny October day, she had thought it out very carefully. She knew it was just a matter of time before someone else realized that place was there; someone with the foresight to know that the lack of housing, especially for young couples, was about to come to a head. When that happened, the little lake and meadow would be jammed with house after house, ruined forever. But if she owned the land, she could develop it slowly, thoughtfully, with large lots and careful restrictions. It would be a fine legacy to leave the community that had given her such a good life.

She threw herself into it with a vengeance. Not one area was beyond her scrutiny. Wet and tired she scampered over logs with surveyors, spoke diplomatically but intensely to local politicians and talked to every contractor she could find, gathering information, making plans.

Life changed. The sweet little old lady became a tycoon of sorts, regarded with consternation and envy by many. She developed a thick skin and keen bargaining sense. Not a dime was spent if she could get the same thing for a nickel. But she also knew when to pay for the best and what corners could not be cut. Bewildered, her children stood back and watched, hardly knowing this person who had emerged.

It took a long time, longer than she had thought. The frustration was incredible and considering her impatient nature, her accomplishment was even greater than many realized. For she was determined to live to see those nice little houses to fruition.

Years continued to pass though she was too busy to notice. Busier than ever, now that all the approvals had been given and construction on the first house was about to start, she was surprised when she received a phone call from her granddaughter. This was her son's eldest, a bright young thing in her early twenties, newly married and trying to get settled.

"Gram, you know those houses you're going to build outside town?" she began the conversation. "Well, Ron and I have been saving like crazy and would like to buy one."

TV habits not like they used be watch a whole slew of old programs, these ones featuring real actors as opposed to animated characters. But these shows were more banal than even the worst cartoons. We'd sit through Gilligan's Island, Get Smart, The Beverly Hillbillies and Hogan's Heroes.

When my brother Klaus majored in psychology at the University of Toronto, he took a course dealing with children and television. I would be forced to watch the ultimate in children's programs...Sesame Street, all the while longing to see something a little less educational.

Despite this overload of television-watching, my friend and I still loved actual indoor activities such as reading, writing, drawing and playing with Barbie dolls (yes, I believe Barbie and Ken can provide an educational outlet for active imaginations).

Unfortunately, many children sit idle while watching t.v. They remain passive as images come across the screen, allowing their brains to become saturated with whatever information is offered.

And today's programs almost seem more like commercials. The other day I asked my six-year-old niece Jessica how many television characters she knows which don't have corresponding dolls or comic books (which kids insist upon for Christmas or birthday presents).

She sat back, bit her lip, rolled her eyes, and thought for awhile. Her mind must have gone over shows such as Pee-wee's Playhouse, Ghostbusters, Muppet Babies and Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles, which all have some product on the market.

"Bugs Bunny?" Jessica asked earnestly. "No," I said. "That doesn't count. He was around even before my time."

Always one to enjoy a challenge, Jessica guessed again. "How about Scooby-Doo?" she asked. But, no, that was another old cartoon.

She finally came up with Full-House, a non-cartoon television program shown during prime-time. How sad it should take more than two tries for my young niece to find a television program which isn't more than a disguised, half-hour commercial.

More discouragement about today's television offerings and viewing habits can be found while reading some entries to the Echo's White Swan Fairy Tale contest. A few stories were actually quite disturbing, featuring blood and gore and guts, with swans getting their heads blown off and bullet-holes described with immaculate precision. In one story, written in the first-person, the author is shot in the head with an AK47 yet lives to finish the tale.

All too often, violence is used to enthrall audiences (it's easier for script-writers than thinking of an actual plot), and great doses of this television will desensitize people. Young people see deaths flickering across the screen each day, but don't understand the finality of dying.

Even Jessica and her sister Sarah have gone through periods of watching violent shows. I've been strangled a few times when Jessica wanted to play Hulk Hogan. ("Let's wrestle," she'd say before putting me in a headlock.)

Still, there's one thing that really bothers me about my niece's television habits. It's not that they watch too much, or that they don't think about what their watching. What really bothers me is that neither likes the Flintstones.

not working to go to college. They are not working to help out at home. They are working to buy designer clothes and to consume the goods earmarked for those whose income is totally disposable, i.e. kids do not pay rent, food or other costs of living. Therefore the music and entertainment industries exploit them as well as the clothing, food and automobile hucksters.

Educators should be worried but I'm afraid they started the sell-out long ago when they asked business and industry to come into the schools to tell them how to educate for the job market. The schools began to shift their priorities from trying to teach kids to think, to teaching technical skills needed in the job market. Schooling for jobs, or for more schooling for higher paying jobs has become the 'mission' of our schools. All their talk about developing the whole child is sheer nonsense. They are training technicians, automatons for the consumer society. Maybe us teachers became more interested in consumption that teaching.

If there is anything that separates the human being from the machine it is the very human capacity to think. When we have given that up, just call the kids "R-2 D-2". It's time to read Huxley's Brave New World again.

Finally reaching age of reason, and laugh lines

I can actually more easily recall earlier birthdays of more significance to me — turning 12, and getting my first bicycle, turning 16 and being 'legal' in a pool hall, turning 21, and able to enter a beverage room without worrying — but I don't know if going way back like this is really a sign of aging or of a misspent youth...

Shakespeare wrote about the seven ages of man, running from being bald and toothless as a baby and back again at extreme old age, but I think the problem is the tendency to accept chronological age as the only kind of measurement.

Rather than Shakespeare's 'seven ages of man,' biomedical and social research have replaced the single chronological concept with five ages that don't really match — or follow one another.

According to Edward Bernays, who did some research into the subject, regardless of our chronological age, we have a mental age, a societal age, a physiological age, and an emotional age.

By societal, they refer to a person's adjustability to those around him or her. The example he uses is a man of 60 who is as bashful as a boy of six societally. (I don't think that's me).

The physiological age factor compares people's age time-wise with the shape they are in. For instance, you often see medical descriptions that redefine age, such as 'you've got the heart of a thirty-year-old.' I weigh at least ten pounds less than I did when I left the city, and am in a lot better shape than many pudgy couch potatoes.

Not that I don't watch TV. In fact I went out of my way to be near a set where I could see the Blue Jays when they had a chance to clinch their division. And I jumped up and down like a lot of other people did when Henke fireballed that last pitch.

And that's another example of the various ways we measure. How many men — regardless of chronological age — revert to an emotional age of 16 when sports are involved.

I know I've got different ages, depending on how things are measured, but if you see me on the street and want to wish me a 'Happy Birthday' based on my chronological age, that's OK.

But just remember: those aren't wrinkles — they're laugh lines.

Garnering concern for conservation:

Bus tour highlights CA's management

by SUSAN GROBER
Staff Reporter

With cameras and binoculars in hand, close to 100 people trekked through bushes and over streams in the Kawartha Region watershed last Sunday on a "10 Years of Conservation" bus tour.

The tour was organized to provide people with a better understanding of the Kawartha Region Conservation Authority (KRCA). Beginning at the Ken Reid Conservation Authority, participants from all over the region visited a variety of sites where staff explained each particular project, pointing out its history, technical aspects and contribution to conservation goals.

"We want property owners to make the Conservation Authority work for them," says general manager Ian Macnab. "That way we can work together to manage the land."

At the September 20 Haliburton County council meeting, Macnab discussed expanding the KRCA into our area. Somerville and Bexley Townships have requested that more of their lands be included in the Authority. Because the Authority requires all of a watershed, this move would require participation from Haliburton County's Burnt and Gull River watersheds.

The youngest authority in Ontario

Conservation Authorities are governing corporate bodies established under the Conservation Authorities Act of Ontario. Of the 38 Conservation Authorities in the province, the KRCA is the youngest. With a goal of promoting the conservation and wide use of the natural resources in the Kawartha Region, the KRCA focuses on a series of land and water management programs in the watershed.

The watershed is an area of land which is drained by one of the region's creeks and rivers. In the Kawarthas, watershed covers an area of 2,563 square kilometres, and there are 20 Conservation Authority member municipalities.

Funding is obtained from the province and each of the member municipalities within the watershed. Each municipality is directly involved in the KRCA's decision-making process through an appointed member (usually an elected council member) who sits on one of its administrative boards.

The KRCA is eligible for a provincial grant of about 60 per cent of the cost for a project; landowners pay about 30 per cent, while the municipality picks up about 10 per cent in their levy.

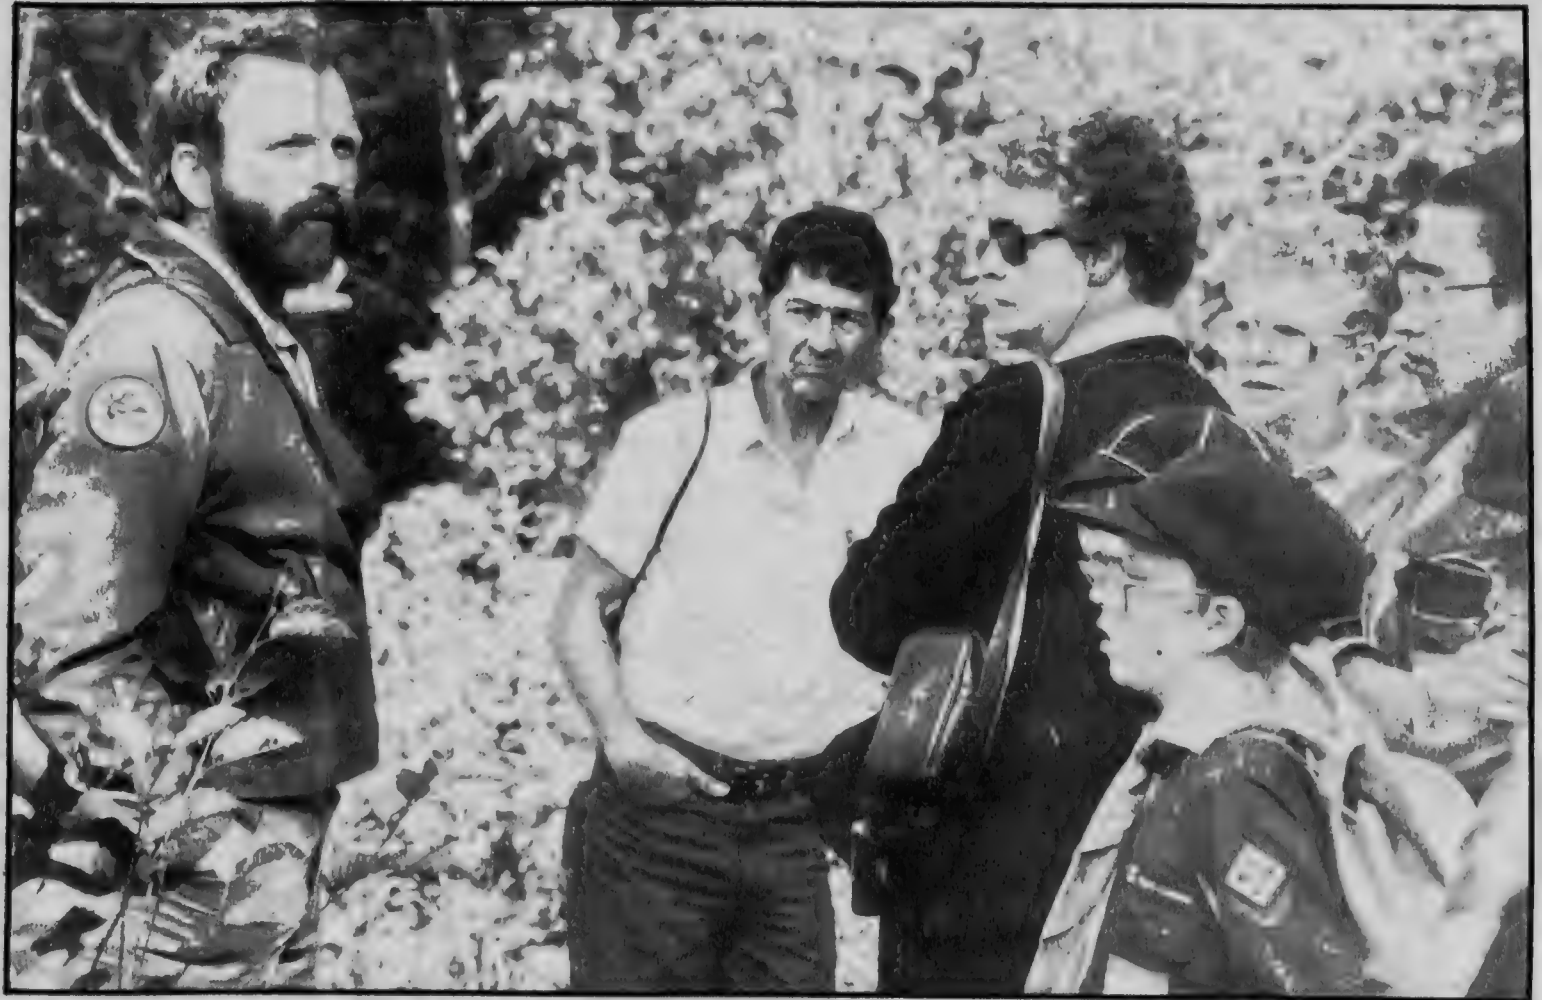

"The split of cost is a good deal for all concerned," says Macnab, stressing the importance of the KRCA's programs.

Programs established by the KRCA fall into one of the following categories: Conservation and Land Management; Information and Education; Resources Planning, and Water Management.

Through Conservation and Land Management, also known as the Conservation Services Program, advice and assistance are provided in the management of land and water resources in private or public ownership. This program is divided into four specific services: tree and shrub planting, sediment control, stream improvement, and conservation planning. The cost of each service is shared between the landowner and the KRCA.

This year over 48,000 trees and shrubs were planted throughout the watershed, bringing the total to over 320,000 trees and shrubs since the program began in 1981. To show what results can be achieved under the Tree and Shrub Planting Service, bus tour participants were taken to what is known as the Ritter property, an example of the sites which the KRCA reforests every year for the following reasons:

- re-establishing tree cover on marginal or unworkable land;
- reducing runoff and controlling erosion by wind and water;
- maintaining groundwater supplies;
- providing windbreaks and shelterbelts;

Ernie Silhanek, assistant field superintendent with the Kawartha Region Conservation Authority, points out development areas at the Pigeon River Headwaters CA on Sunday's tour. Haliburton has been asked to join the KRCA

- providing sources of wood fibre and timber; and
- improving wildlife habitat.

The Stream Improvement Service was performed on the Kniewasser property, where a sedimentation problem was reduced, while at the same time improving the fish habitat. This project was given high priority because the stream is located in the headwaters of the Pigeon River, which eventually find their way into Lake Ontario.

The program also covers problems such as uncontrolled erosion, unrestricted livestock, deforestation and poor land use practices, which all have an impact on the quantity and quality of water flow in local streams. Problems are remedied by controlling instream or streamside erosion and sedimentation, which maintains vegetation cover and good water flows, especially in headwater areas. The KRCA provides assistance and advice in areas of livestock fencing, in-stream devices, removing debris, tree planting, streamside forest management, and fish and wildlife habitat management.

Stream and forestry components of the Conservation Planning Service were also used on the Kniewasser property. This is primarily an advisory service, designed to assist landowners in managing the natural resources of their land in a cost-efficient manner, thus incorporating aspects of the other three services.

Stream Improvement for Flood Control was used in a Cambray project, where the landowner had concerns of regular flooding from McLaren Creek during the spring runoff. The Victoria County Roads Department had excess fill which it wanted to dispose of at the time, and ended up working together with the Authority to complete this project. Work essentially involved improving the water flow by widening, deepening, and straightening the creek bed, increasing the size of the culvert and creating a low-lying area around the house to drain the lawn. Heavy equipment needed to place and grade the fill was provided by the County Roads Department, while Authority staff completed the rest of the work.

Land management

The acquisition and management of lands which are significant for conservation comes under Resources Planning. Bus tour participants went to three: the Ken Reid, Pigeon River Headwaters, and Fleetwood Creek Management conservation areas.

Dysart concerns of flood plain are split

by SUSAN GROBER
Staff Reporter

There was a polarization of opinions between Dysart et al residents concerned over flood plain during a public meeting about proposed changes to the municipality's official plan policies last week.

Some worried flood plain policies would be too restrictive, prohibiting any development on their properties. Others want to ensure proposed policies are strict enough to protect from possible flooding problems. Jim Dymment, from the municipality's planners Bob Lehman and Associates, presented to residents the proposed flood plain mapping and policies for official plan and zoning bylaw changes on September 25.

Dymment explained that maps hanging on the walls of council chambers were primarily drawn up from air photo interpretation, but an engineer did walk through some areas for closer examination. While maps used for the official plan are "supposed to be general in nature, zoning bylaw maps must be absolutely accurate," Dymment said. "It's important because they will be the law."

Pointing out that special policies will be in effect for the commercial core of Haliburton Village, Dymment assured residents this is common practice when mapping out flood plains. "It would be unwise to say, 'you can't let the Village of Haliburton grow anymore.'"

Residents who had doubts about the present mapping were told to consult with Dymment, and he would visit their property. "We recognize that the mapping is probably not perfect," he said "In some instances you have to look at the property because map lines just won't do."

This comment, however, disturbed many people. "If it's not perfect, then what's the point? How can you protect against flooding if your maps are all wrong?"

Flood plain mapping isn't wrong, Dymment stressed. It provides a general guideline for the municipality. He also told residents that flood plain restrictions often only affect part of a person's property, allowing appropriate development on portions which are away from flood risks.

Resident Paul Hebert pointed out other restrictions placed on property could rule out development altogether. "Either you're too close Information overflow: Snowdon councillors Dwaine Wruth, Ron Burk and Al Jopling got the facts on the province's flood plain policies from MNR representatives Randy French and Dave Johnson on Friday.

A flood of facts on plain policy

by SUSAN GROBER
Staff Reporter

There's been a flood of response—much of it negative locally—since the province revised its policy to restrict development where water damage from storms is likely to occur.

Between 1950 and 1985, more than 455 floods were reported across Ontario. Combined flood damages exceeded $85-million and 86 people died in major floods which occurred in Toronto in 1954, Timmins in 1961, and Cambridge in 1974. In response to such floods, Conservation Authorities

MNR helps Snowdon with flood plain plan

by SUSAN GROBER
Staff Reporter

At times the meeting became a heated debate, but Snowdon residents and councillors tried to come to an understanding about proposed flood plain policies with representatives of the Ministry of Natural Resources last Friday.

This spring, Snowdon Township lost Ministry of Municipal Affairs funding to rezone its bylaw because it had no policy which adequately addressed flood plains. Both the Irondale and Burnt River systems flow through the township. During the meeting held at the municipal office in Gelert, Randy French, a regional planner with the Huntsville MNR, and Minden district lands and parks technician Dave Johnson tried to clear up misconceptions on provincial flood plain policy and alleviate the fears of those who are affected.

Of the more than 30 people attending the meeting, many objected to a provincial policy which establishes standards for defining flood plains by flooding which resulted from Hurricane Hazel in 1954 or the Timmins storm in 1961. "We're talking a whole different ballgame," one resident said.

Some were confused with different terms used for flood prone areas. "Can you build on EP (Environmental Protection zones)? Can you build on flood plains? What are the guidelines here?" French explained it's all a matter of wording. The Environmental Protection zoning can be used to control development in wetland or flood-prone areas. "But if you want to call an apple and apple, you can call it a flood plain zone."

One woman asked whether the province will compensate landowners for taxes paid on property which all of a sudden cannot be developed, or the municipality for assessment lost on undeveloped land. French says that, as yet, he has not seen any compensation made by the provincial government. It was added that tax assessment is currently under review in Minden, where a few property owners affected by flood plain policy have requested a cut in taxes. However, the municipality is currently appealing this re-assessment.

Another was concerned how the proposed flood plain policy would affect her home. "We only have a say over a property's development potential," French assured. "We're Acquired by the KRCA in 1981 because of its closeness to the McLaren Creek marsh and its central location within the watershed, the Ken Reid area was purchased for $200,000 with donations raised through the Nature Conservancy of Canada, the Canadian National Sportsmen's Fund and the McLean Foundation.

This area is rich with life: the marsh provides a spawning ground for muskie and has a high density of nesting ospreys (this year six pairs nested in the marsh and surrounding area, breeding 10 young ospreys).

Residents are invited to use the area for hiking, nature study, canoeing, picnicking and cross-country skiing. A camping site is available for organized groups such as Brownies, Cubs and Guides.

Pigeon River Headwaters Conservation Area was purchased by the KRCA in 1985 with a $125,000 donation made through the Nature Conservancy of Canada through the work of Charles Sauriol. Because of its location within the Pigeon River system, this area is deemed to be extremely important. Headwater areas are those where the water table is close to the soil surface, resulting in the formation of many streams and springs which provide and maintain the water supply to the actual river system. This area was acquired as protection against logging or development; it will be developed on a smaller scale than the Ken Reid C.A., and will provide demonstrations of proper management techniques for forestry, wetland and wildlife purposes.

The KRCA is currently negotiating an agreement with the Ontario Heritage Foundation, owners of the 900-acre Fleetwood Creek area, to give responsibility of managing the property to the Authority. Necessary funding and guidance would be provided by the Foundation, which is affiliated with the Ministry of Citizenship and Culture.

Legacy of a hurricane

Water Management became the main role of the Conservation Authority after extensive property damage and loss of life resulted from Hurricane Hazel in 1954. The focus is to manage water quantity, namely flooding which results from spring runoff or heavy rainfall.

Acting as a flood warning agency for all its member municipalities, the KRCA monitors water levels in streams and rivers throughout the watershed and combines this information with local weather forecasts and advice from the Streamflow Forecast Centre in Toronto. Water levels are monitored with equipment such as the automatic stream gauge tour participants visited at a station at Mariposa Brook.

A preventative approach to minimizing flood damage comes with the Authority's Municipal Plan Input and Review Program. According to KRCA, rivers have a natural area, known as a flood plain, where excess water from heavy rainfall or spring runoff will flow. This program encourages landowners, developers and municipalities to recognize the existence of this flood plain area and to restrict changes or development.

The Authority will advise any

Participants of a Kawartha Region Conservation Authority bus tour checked out the results of a stream improvement program at the Knie Wasser property last Sunday.

watershed residents wishing to purchase, sever or develop land for residential purposes, with staff commenting on how these changes would relate to flooding. Using aerial photographs, maps, computers and site inspections, staff can determine if the property is subject to flooding under normal or severe conditions, where a building may be located, and what structures can be used to protect against effects of flooding. All Authorities have the power to limit such development under the Conservation Authorities Act of Ontario.

Flood control

A trip to a Port Perry subdivision exemplified a Stormwater Management project the KRCA is involved in to reduce the increase in overland runoff caused by heavy storms in urban areas. As urbanization increases, more stormwater is directed into catch basins and storm sewers. As this increased flow from the storm sewers empties into major watercourses and lakes, more flooding and erosion occurs downstream. A large pond at this subdivision is designed to collect stormwater, and then slowly release the water into the Port Perry storm sewers which drain into Lake Scugog.

Currently, the Conservation Authority is developing Fill, Construction and Alteration to Waterways Regulations, where permission will be required for any developments within wetlands or areas susceptible to flooding or erosion.

Areas susceptible to "regulatory flooding" will be defined on maps as "fill lines." A regulatory flood is the storm where the known precipitation over a specific time period has caused the greatest amount of damage in a particular area. In this area, the Timmins storm, which produced 193 mm. (7.6 inches) of rain in 12 hours, is used as a guideline for flood mapping.

According to the Authority, the development of these regulations would cost $255,245 over a four-year period. The first set of fill lines should be registered with the province by 1992.

A trip to Sucker Creek in Lindsay demonstrated the Authority's Erosion Control Project. In 1976, Sucker Creek was widened, deepened and straightened to create an agricultural drain. However, at its completion, the Water Board of Lindsay expressed concern that discharge from the drain was contributing to high turbidity levels at the Water Filtration Plant, 1.6 kilometres downstream from the drain outlet.

The KRCA was concerned about erosion and environmental impacts resulting from agricultural municipal drainage, and felt the current project incorporating erosion control and environmental management techniques would act as an example of sound design and construction of drains.

Implementation of this demonstration project involved co-operation from several agencies and municipalities, including the KRCA, Lindsay Water Board, Town of Lindsay, Township of Ops, Ministries of Natural Resources, Environment, and Agriculture and Food.

Decisions, decisions: These J. Douglas Hodgson Elementary School students had a hard time deciding what to have for dessert at last Thursday's open house at the school. After the hotdog dinner, parents were invited into the classrooms.

Students to learn about drugs from OPP

The Ontario Provincial Police have asked permission to teach Grade 9 and 10 students about drug awareness.

The request was brought before trustees by director of education Stuart Baker at last Tuesday's Haliburton County Board of Education meeting.

"This program fits in very nicely with a program (board superintendent) Dale (Robinson) has taken up on illegal drugs," said Baker, adding that the Ministry of Education is offering a guaranteed grant of at least $20,000 for each board in an awareness program on illegal drug use.

Trustee Ed de Grosbois asked "what's the magnitude of this problem in Haliburton County?"

Although the number of such cases is confidential, Baker said "there are some problems in the county." There are higher instances of drug abuse in tourist and cottage country areas.

Drug use will be discussed in an afternoon program for students, a supper hour meeting for school administrative staff and an evening program for staff and parents.

Representatives from the judicial system and rehabilitation services will join police officers to act as presenters.

Townships are getting all the facts on province's flood plain policies have been established for water management, and the provincial government has issued a policy controlling development in flood prone areas under the Planning Act.

In the early 1980s, the Ministries of Natural Resources and Municipal Affairs expressed concerns over new zoning bylaws of Anson, Hindon and Minden and Lutterworth Townships, saying they did not adequately consider flooding along the Gull River. In 1981, provincial and federal governments agreed to undertake an engineering study of the Gull River to determine the extent of the flood problem. Since that time, AHM has passed its flood plain policies, but Lutterworth rejected its first mapping and has been holding out before approving the revised version.

Currently, the municipality of Dysart et al is going over its proposed mapping before including flood plains in its official plan and zoning bylaw; and Snowdon Township is starting from the beginning, with council trying to decide how to go about the mapping process.

To apply flood plain policy, the province works together with the local municipality to adopt appropriate land use policies in the official plan and regulations in the zoning bylaw (development is also controlled through issuance of building permits). Public meetings are held during the process of changing these policies, so residents do have the opportunity for input.

Under Provincial Flood Plain Policy revised in 1984, municipalities are required to implement flood plain management concerns in their land use planning, through official plans and zoning bylaws. Mapping which defines flood plains must be established using the higher of either (a) the flood resulting from a storm event equal to Hurricane Hazel in 1954 or the Timmins storm in 1961; (b) the 100-year flood; or (c) an observed flood event.

Many landowners are upset because provincial policy prohibits new buildings or structures in the flood plain which are susceptible to flood-related damages or which could affect adjacent uses.

Flood plain mapping recognizes that some areas pose greater flood risks than others. Areas with deeper and faster moving water, closer to the river channel as well as storage areas, are called the floodway. Other parts of the flood plain, where flooding is shallow and there is very little flow, are the flood fringe.

The province says restrictive development controls are necessary in the floodway where there is a greater risk of loss of life, property damage, and increased flood impacts to other properties if development occurs. Only minor additions to existing buildings are permitted, providing they are flood-proofed. New development is prohibited without proof from an engineer indicating there is a possibility of flood-proofing with unacceptable off-site impacts.

Flooding poses less risk in the flood fringe, however. Controls on development are less restrictive in these areas, where new development is generally permitted subject to flood-proofing.

Some landowners feel resentment when certain development is allowed in the flood plain. Since the commercial core of many urban settlements, such as Minden, centre around a river, the provincial policy has provided for the identification of Special Policy Areas to maintain a community's social and economic existence. New development, as well as replacement of existing buildings, is permitted in these areas. The Minden commercial core and some other downtown areas are examples of this exception.

But provincial regulations state if you build in one area, a fairly strict application of policy in other areas of the flood plain is necessary. This is referred to as the bathtub effect. If an area is filled too much, it changes the aspect of the flood plain. Some areas must be left open, or else the rest of the area will be raised for someone else, says the Ministry of Natural Resources.

The ministry has tried to alleviate some problems in the flood plain but, as a result, some doubt has been created in the mapping, MNR planning technician Grahame Wales told the Echo in an interview last May.

"In southern Ontario, once the Conservation Authority does the mapping that's it, no revisions. No ifs, ands, or buts—their policy is no building in a flood plain. But there is no Conservation Authority in this area. Some of the residents brought up concerns, so we tried to help them out. Now some are suspicious of the mapping. We've been running in a vicious circle.

"We've done all we can to accommodate people around the river. People don't like restrictions. But if you're building in a flood plain and there is a major storm, what do you do? We have to accept the fact that there are areas that will be subject to really bad floods. Future owners have the right to know they are buying a lot in an area safe from flooding."

Residents at last Friday night's flood plain meeting in Snowdon chambers

Flood policies new to Snowdon residents

concerned with new development, not existing buildings."

Residents also questioned the methods used to determine flood prone areas. Some have been on their property for years and never had problems with flooding. "The last time I saw my land flooded was when Noah was on it," said Keith Schrader. "We're the ones who own the land. We know what floods and what doesn't flood," said another.

French explained there are two methods of flood plain mapping. Aerial photos, he said, are not wholly accurate but "put a yellow flag up to say which areas could flood." Many use this method as it is cheaper than the more accurate route of hiring an engineer to do an analysis, survey the area in question, and work with the maps.

The price for an air photo is between $2,000 and $3,000, while an engineering study for only the Irondale River would be about $75,000. "But that cost could be cut in half," French advised. Rather than get a "full-blown study of the Irondale river with cross-sections and detailed maps," an engineer could just gather the information needed and, rather than draw the lines on a map, just provide the township with the elevation levels.

Confusion over the ministry's policy on determining what is a flood plain was also expressed. Some wondered whether standard measurements were used to place an area of land, owned by Manfred Dziedzitz, into an Environmental Protection zone. Dziedzitz had hoped to sever his land into six or seven lots and needed the MNR's okay before Snowdon council could provide approval.

On July 19, a ministry engineer took a measurement of 16.4 feet (5 metres) above the water level and stated any land on Dziedzitz's property which lies below that mark should be placed in an EP zone.

French explained the 5 metres pertains to that specific property and isn't a standard measurement.

Johnson suggested landowners approach the MNR prior to submitting applications for severances and other development proposals, "so staff can check out your property."

Dziedzitz asked whether landowners have any recourse once their property is zoned as floodway, where no development is allowed. "If you wish to refute you can, using your own funds, hire an engineer to prove to the land divisions committee that your zoning is wrong," said Johnson.

People who want to build despite the risks of flooding should have that right, many said. "If you want to take that risk, that's fine," said Johnson. "But what happens to that poor, unsuspecting person who buys the property after you?"

Some asked why the province is placing so much importance on flood plains in the first place. "What responsibility is it to you if my property floods out? Is it protection for the provincial government?" Fire departments, ambulance services and hospitals are all affected if there is severe flood damage, French answered. "Flooding puts pressure on a municipality's emergency services."

Also, any new buildings vulnerable to flood damage and constructed in a floodway after it has been identified, are not eligible for flood disaster assistance.

Dysart residents concerned

to your neighbors septic system, too close to the road allowance, or too close to the flood plain. What's left?"

Dyment said people "must find a way to build outside of the flood plain without infringing on their neighbours."

Another resident asked whether fill can be used on a piece of property to take it out of flood risks. Dyment said the placement of fill is out of a municipality's jurisdiction, and therefore will not be included in Dysart et al's flood plain policies. Some people with concern over wetlands and a bathtub effect became angry after taking this to mean there are no restrictions against fill. But Dyment stressed the Ministry of Natural Resources has the power to restrict improper or damaging uses of such.

Michael Butz asked for clarification on the municipality's mandate to "protect human life" through flood plain restrictions. "Does this mean to protect humanity as a whole, such as protecting wetlands, or does it just mean to save individual people?" he asked.

Flood plain policy "is more of a physical thing (protecting property, homes and individuals) than a biological thing," Dyment explained.

Jim Knowlton suggested that adopting a flood plain policy "isn't exactly in the best interest of the municipality," which needs development for increased assessment.

He also asked, "if it's done lackadaisically, then what's the point?"

Dyment said flood plain boundaries have been "determined as well as possible. We can't survey all the areas, it would just be too expensive."

"What recourse does the landowner have, other than to pay for his own survey, if the mapping is wrong?" Dyment was asked. Landowners can appeal to the Ontario Municipal Board if they have a problem with mapping.

Curry Bishop suggested it wouldn't have cost the municipality too much to have each property surveyed. "Everyone knows how poorly things were done on the official plan, and as far as I'm concerned this is every bit as bad. We need everything to be done properly to begin with. It costs a small fortune to fight (flood plain mapping)."

Larry Hewitt pointed out a large portion of Dysart's industrial park is within the flood plain. Dyment agreed this does present a problem for the municipality. "We know it floods, we know it's wet. It floods from the watershed above it. Many lots might only be part in the flood plain, however."

"How can you put a big building on an industrial site and then try to get a septic system in there?" Hewitt asked.

There are still a lot of problems to be ironed out before Dysart et al can pass its flood plain policies, Dyment stressed.

He also presented residents with the proposed official plan policies saying, "policies and zones have been prepared in as much detail as possible, with as much flexibility as possible." Under the purpose of the Hazard Lands designation in Dysart's official plan, the following amendment is proposed to replace current policy on flood plain lands: "To protect human life and reduce property damage by controlling development on those sites that are physically unsuited for development" and "To minimize the alteration of the natural environment, conserve water resources and minimize water pollution."

OPP still looking into reeve's right to sit on council

The Apsley OPP is still investigating allegations that Cardiff Reeve Maurice Bradley does not have the right to sit on council.

Bill Davis, a Cardiff township resident who lost against Bradley in the last election, has said that because Bradley only leases land in Cardiff, Bradley is holding his seat improperly. He brought his complaint to the OPP, which has been investigating the matter for the past month.

Bradley, who used to live in Cardiff township when he was deputy reeve, is now leasing land and living in a neighbouring township. He doesn't want to comment on the allegation because of the police investigation.

An OPP spokesman said more information is being researched and it may be some time before the case is settled. It will probably go to the Crown Attorney's office, and a decision made from there, he said.

Board hopes to expand with camps Sunship Earth program

by SUSAN GROBER

Staff Reporter

Grade 7 students of Archie Stouffer Elementary School will participate in Sunship Earth at Camp Wanakita this month in a pilot project which could become a county-wide program.

Normally, Grade 6 students from outside Haliburton County participate in Sunship Earth, a hands-on science program utilizing Haliburton Highlands Secondary School students as councillors. But the camp would like to expand its program to involve children from all the area's elementary schools, trustees were told at last Tuesday's Haliburton County Board of Education meeting.

"It's an excellent program," board superintendent Dale Robinson told trustees. Robinson's son was a councillor with Sunship Earth last year.

The board would subsidize this proposed project in the future but, because of insufficient funds this year, students will have to raise $130 each to cover food and lodging for the four-day program. This money can be paid on installment, Robinson said.

Grade 7 teachers and camp staff would supervise the 65 Archie Stouffer students, who will be at the camp from October 11 to 13.

Spanish exchange student paves path for new sisters

by MARTHA PERKINS
Editor

TEENAGERS WILL BE TEENAGERS no matter which country they come from. On Saturday morning, after a Friday night party with friends from the high school, Idoia Barquin of Spain was hobbling around her Haliburton home on crutches. In the small hours of the night, she had twisted her ankle on some stairs and following a hospital visit early Saturday morning, she finally returned home. Eyes downcast because she hadn't phoned to say she'd be out all night, she sheepishly admitted she probably wouldn't go to another party that night. She was, she said with only a trace of her normal sparkle in her voice, a bit tired.

Idoia (a Basque name pronounced E-doya) is simply giving her host parents, Brenda and Curtis Eastmure, a taste of what it will be like when their two daughters become 18. The Eastmures shake their heads as if to say to one another, just wait.

Little Jocelyn, 7, and Vanessa, 4, realize that their "sister" for a year is calming the rough waters which lay ahead when they become teenagers. Idoia, however, is well aware of the favour she is doing for the young Eastmures. Back in Spain, she has an older brother and sister who broke in her now more lenient parents.

"My sister, when she was 16, she wanted to go to parties. My parents asked her 'What time will you be home? Who are you going with? Who will bring you home?'" Now Idoia just has to say she's going out with friends and won't be back for a few hours. "My poor brother and sister. I like being the youngest."

"In Spain there are some streets for young people and there are a lot of bars and discos," Idoia says of a teenager's night life back in her home town near Bilbao. Although many teenagers there, as here, drink, she's just as happy with a glass of tonic water. "All you do is drink in Spain, but not only alcohol. It's boring."

Before one gets the wrong image of this fun-loving girl, it should be noted that Friday night's party was the first she attended since coming to Canada one month ago as an exchange student. And that when she stayed up very late another night last week, she was diligently studying for two tests.

A worried look crosses Idoia's face when she thinks of school. The Education Foundation for Foreign Studies, which is organizing the exchange, stipulates that students must maintain a C average in school. This can be tough when the student is also trying to learn English, and Idoia has the added pressure of needing to earn her diploma here so she can attend university when she returns to Spain.

"I want to do two things," she replies when asked what she'll study in university. "Psychology in Spain or pilot in the U.S.A." Right now, even though her cousin is training to be a pilot in Dallas and the idea has a certain appeal, she's favouring psychology. "I don't think I would like travelling all the time."

Travelling to Canada is a different matter all together. When Idoia applied to the program, she was eager to leave home and learn about a far-away culture. "I wanted to know a new kind of life, different customs, different people. And I wanted to live one year without my family to know if I would miss them."

Mr. Eastmure suggests she was looking for a taste of independence. Smiling, Idoia looks at him and says "Not independence because here you keep me—and I like that." Spreading your wings is one thing; flying is quite another.

Canada was chosen primarily because she could learn English, and secondly because her relatives had told her what a beautiful place it was. "They said 'Go to Canada, is lovely place with trees and lakes.'" Why not the United States? "I have heard people speak better in Canada. In the U.S.A., you can do what you want. There are no laws and everyone is free. It's like Hollywood films. In Canada, the people here are more similar to Europeans and more conservative. I've heard the family is much more important here."

One of her friends who went to school in the United States found the courses very easy; too easy in fact and much behind those in Spain. At the Haliburton Highlands Secondary School, Idoia is repeating some of the things she's already learned, but is finding it much more difficult than her cousin did.

"Is very hard, school," she says. "What the people do in one hour, I need four."

However, there are some bright sides about high school life in Ontario. For one, she's quite taken with her locker, where she's hung pictures of her family and boyfriend, and a mirror. (Wearing black stockings, a black leather mini skirt and black turtleneck, Idoia obviously has a keen eye for fashion.)

One difference she's noticed is the stricter smoking regulations. "In Spain, everyone can smoke everywhere except in the classes," she says. As well, very few young people in Spain get part-time jobs. The country has unemployment problems and jobs are left for those who have to support themselves. Even during university, students will continue to live at home and spend the summers in the sun.

Not that Idoia would have time for a job here. It's taking all of her concentration to keep up with her school work, and she's grateful for all the help she's receiving from friends and staff alike.

Haliburton visit is not so quiet

Unlike Rotary exchange students, who do not need to maintain a certain academic level, Idoia is dependent on the school staff to help her achieve high marks. And unlike at home, when she runs into a problem, she knows she can't run to her parents to fix it for her.

"I can ask Curtis to help me, but I want to know if I can do it alone. Here I have a lot of problems at school and I have to speak with a lot of people and I have to do it alone."

"I think I will get maturity."

Winter sports

She hopes she'll also learn how to ski. The Eastmures own Maple Sands Resort, an active participant in the lodge-to-lodge cross country ski program and Idoia is also ready for the slopes at Sir Sam's. "All my friends told me 'You can't come back if you don't know how to ski.'"

Then there's her driver's licence. Listening to Idoia and Japanese exchange student Noriko Yonei talk, Canada is becoming haven for young drivers who can't get their licence until they're 18 back home. Idoia's now old enough to legitimately get hers, but the principal at HHSS says she can't take the driver's course until January because she needs to be able to read the information on the signs. That's a good point, Idoia concedes, and she's quite happy to be patient—in Spain it would cost her $1,000 to get her licence.

(The Eastmures, who will probably be supplying the practice car, don't seem to mind the wait either. Some things—such as their own daughters reaching the car-borrowing age—can't seem to come late enough.)

But Idoia would also like to do some teaching, telling people what her homeland and its people are like.

"My daddy and uncle work together and have two shops of bathroom and kitchen supplies. My mother works at home, and helps my father."

"All the towns are together. My village is Portugalete, about 10 minutes from Bilbao (which is approximately the same size as Peterborough. All (the homes) are flats, not houses, and not as many trees. But from my window, I can see the sea (Bay of Biscay)."

"There's a lot of industry in northern Spain, and a lot of people come here to work."

"We're different from the English and German. We are like Italians—Latin. Everyone's more friendly."

Idoia's area of Spain is Basque, which gave us the beret and more recently, violence from those who want independence from Spain.

"When Francisco Franco came to Spain, he was bad with Basque people. Now there are people who are angry. In general, the Basque people don't like the ETA (the group demanding independence.) They kill people. Only a few people with closed minds want independence."

"The Basque feel happy to be Basque, but don't kill, that's stupid."

Violence aside, the situation in Basque is similar to that in Quebec—a people who want to retain their own culture, independent of the culture which threatens to overwhelm them. Idoia says the Basque language, which is unlike all others and learned in school, has unknown origins but is a source of pride for the people who speak it.

In 1992, when the European Economic Community is formed, there will be "no frontiers" anyway, she says, and European countries will work together to compete with North America and Asia.

Idoia has already had a taste of this when her families spent summers at a cottage, the Mediterranean, or Waterford, Ireland. (She says the Irish/Canaan accent is similar, but the Americans' is different.)

And of epicurean tastes, Idoia says some food here is much better, especially the vegetables which are usually over-cooked and bland in Spain. Mrs. Eastmure is still waiting for Idoia to make paella, although Idoia says people from other countries say the Basque don't make the rice dish properly. "They say it's rice with things but not paella."

The hosts' rewards

Having the opportunity to have someone from Spain teach them how to make a Spanish dish is just one of the reasons why the Eastmures look forward to Idoia's year with them.

"I was certainly aware of how mind-expanding travel can be," says Mr. Eastmure, but with him busy in the summer, and Mrs. Eastmure teaching the rest of the year, travel is not as easy as it once was. "I would certainly like to have the time to travel with the children and have them experience the different cultures. The next best thing is bringing a little piece of Spain into your own home."

And with only a month gone by, the Eastmures already realize that saying goodbye to Idoia next summer will be very difficult. "It will be really hard to let go. She's moved into our family and become a part of us."

"Yes, it seems I've been here much longer," says Idoia. She feels she's known the Eastmures for much more than a month, and is enjoying her role as big sister. Life in the country, with a lake as her front lawn, also has its appeals, and she's finding first impressions can be deceiving.

"When I came here, I didn't see any flats, only a lot of grasses and trees—no people. I think this will be more quiet than I thought," she said to herself as they drove north of Toronto.

Now, as her crutches attest to, she knows Haliburton may be small, but that doesn't mean it's quiet

To foster understanding is the challenge for disabled

by MARTHA PERKINS

Editor

LIKE THE LITTLE ENGINE which could, the physically-challenged people gathered at the Haliburton legion on Friday are going to form the support group which can... Can provide friendship and understanding, can set goals and reach them, can remove the roadblocks which stand in their path, and can bring about a change in society's attitudes towards them.

That may sound like a tall order to fill, but if the determination and confidence at that meeting could have been tapped, half the battle would have already been won.

"The onus is on disabled people to challenge the myths and stereotypes we have around us," said Lois Harte-Maxwell, guest speaker at the meeting. "It's up to us to educate the community as to what we want. You have to take your situation to the people around you. You have to make it happen."

"So what does self-help mean? Self-help means self-determination. If it's worth doing and worth doing well, then you get out and do it. People have only secured rights by working for them. But you can't have rights without responsibilities."

During her energetic speech, you could sense people sitting more straight in their chairs and wheelchairs. This was going to be a support group which achieved something, and Mrs. Harte-Maxwell was the perfect person to help lead them there.

When she's not talking about forming support groups, Mrs. Harte-Maxwell is an advocate for other groups, or attending meetings in Peterborough, where she's a city councillor. And when she is busy going from place to place, she remembers a certain doctor's words.

"When I was nine years old, I was out skiing one Sunday in February, and to me, that hill was the Alps. I went home and started to feel a little unwell. On Monday morning, my neck was stiff so I didn't go to school. On Tuesday morning I couldn't get out of bed."

"My mother realized something was wrong and called the doctor, who did a spinal tap right on our kitchen table. It was confirmed I had polio."

"The paralysis was starting to creep up fairly rapidly and I was immediately sent to Riverdale Isolation in Toronto. By 11 o'clock that night, I reached over for a glass of juice I had reached for a couple of hours before. But this time my arm dropped, the glass dropped and smashed to the floor."

"Very soon, only my head could move and I was unconscious. I remember waking up and seeing a clergy man and my parents by my bed. 'I smell a rat,' I said to myself. 'Oh, oh, I think I'm going to die.' When I finally came to, I couldn't even lift my finger. Everything on the inside stopped working too."

"After four months they sent me to Sick Kids—I still couldn't pick up a book. On the day I was admitted to Sick Kids, I was examined by a neurologist."

"When the examination was over, he said to my mother 'How many children do you have?' 'Three,' she replied. Then the doctor told her, and don't forget I was in the room with them, 'You have two children who are healthy and well but this one will never walk again. She'll never sit again and she'll probably be institutionalized.'"

"My mother was so angry. 'How dare you take away the only thing we have, which is hope?' I said to myself, 'I don't know you, but I know my mother so I don't believe you.' His words challenged me to prove he was wrong."

"One and a half years later, I still couldn't walk. I had a friend at the hospital who used to be a ballet dancer. Marilyn and I had had enough of everything being twisted and torn and hurt. We were going to hitchhike home. We were going to make our way down the hill to the highway during our rest hour. She'd go in the front because her arms were stronger than mine, but my leg was stronger than hers, so we'd use that as a brake."

"Down the path, off we went. We started going faster and faster. 'I can't stop it,' Marilyn shouted. The two of us flew down that hill and landed in a heap. Neither one of us could get up and we had to wait here until someone found us. Were we in trouble. We had our heads examined."

"There's a stereotype of us sitting at the gates of Jerusalem with begging bowls," says Lois Harte-Maxwell, seen here with Rod Henderson. "I guess we're handicapped by the ideas we have."

"We didn't do our great escape, but as the years went by, we found there were other ways to do things."

And one of those ways was joining a myriad of support groups. The first one was the Rainbow Club. (She advises choosing names which "promote action and vitality", not some rosy picture of friends simply getting together.)

"The group started to become more action-oriented—there was strength in unity. One of the problems was people with image problems. There's a stereotype of us sitting at the gates of Jerusalem with begging bowls. I guess we're handicapped by the ideas people have. People associate lame-legged with lame-brained. But those of us who do have challenges have to have more ingenuity to get around these obstacles in front of us."

In the past, there was a tendency to try to avoid these obstacles for fear of getting hurt. Acceptance was the norm, and people such as Mrs. Harte-Maxwell decided to question this.

"Do parents try to prevent children from enjoying the right to succeed and the right to fail," she asks. "To become a viable adult, people have to be given the chance. When I was learning how to walk

Disabled must unite, fight for rights

again, I had bruises all over me and I kept on trying."

As the groups became more organized and vocal, they began to get heard. One day, Mrs. Harte-Maxwell was to take part in a presentation at Queen's Park, which she was told was accessible. "You know what accessible means—the side door, back door, the garbage entrance, the service elevator."

"So we were told to go to the back door and it was locked. We pounded and pounded on that door until someone let us in. It was such an affront that because we had mobility problems, we couldn't get in."

"People with disabilities are supposed to be passive. 'Isn't your pension enough? Why are you making all this fuss?' I believe you should be part of the process to make things happen."

In 1979, provincial politicians were about to pass Bill 188 to provide human rights protection to people with disabilities. When Mrs. Harte-Maxwell was at a conference, a government official slipped her a "leaked" document in a brown envelope. Reading the contents, "I almost fell over."

The bill called for rights—separate but equal protection, a clause or two added to the bill of rights, instead of changing it to include people with disabilities. "It was like South Africa—You can ride on the bus but ride on the back."

"You have no idea how quickly we mobilized. We realized we had to stop the bill now so we formed a coalition, again knowing there's strength in unity. I spent most of my days at Queen's Park—setting up press conferences to challenge the government. We all banded together to show the government it

"I urge you people to lobby, reasonably. Together you can do anything; alone you're alone. Make sure you're united behind whatever you're lobbying for."

was unacceptable. We refused to yield. We had the strength and we knew what we wanted—and we won. Finally they agreed they would withdraw Bill 188 and amend the human rights code. One year later, in 1980, the code was amended and it was about time.

"I urge you people to lobby, reasonably. Together you can do anything; alone, you're alone. But you want to be sure you know what you're talking about. Nothing will blow you out of the water more than making an argument you can't back up. Make sure you're united behind whatever you're lobbying for. Work together. Make sure there are no loose hands—that you know who's speaking for the group, where and why. Don't use all your ammunition at once. And you have to know the difference between wants and needs."

"Write to people indicating you expect and answer. Tell them what you need and if the answer is no, ask them why, and ask it by letter. It's not enough to treat you as children by just saying no. If money's the reason, you remind them they can put it in next year's budget. And remember—there's nothing more vulnerable than a politician in election year."

"...What you want to do is build up momentum and credibility. You're going to be a force it's hard for politicians to resist. If you still get negative responses, pull out all the stops. Get every service club to write letters—and don't send form letters. Once, just the threat of a demonstration got us what we wanted. Hopefully, you don't have to get to that stage."

"But be prepared to modify some of your requests. If there are basic rights, however, go after them."

You make things happen, don't wait until someone makes it happen to you."

If any of the dozen or so people at the meeting had been cheerleaders before, as Mrs. Harte-Maxwell drew her speech to a close, they certainly would have given her a rousing cheer. Instead, Eleanor Pye noted that Mrs. Harte-Maxwell had given them a lot to think about, and by the tone of the meeting afterwards, the people were prepared to do something as well.

Peggie Neville, representing the Equal Access Committee, said she felt there was not enough support for the wheelbus fund. The province has committed $30,000, half of the purchase price, Dysart et al will pay $5,000 a year for operating costs, and NorthernWays bus company will operate it. That leaves $30,000, half of the cost of the bus, to be raised locally.

"We're having a problem getting any interest in it," said Mrs. Neville. Extender staff challenged the OPP to a baseball game this summer and raised $700, but with such a long way to go yet, other groups will have to get behind the fund as well. Mrs. Harte-Maxwell suggested getting a community sponsor to pay for the bus. (The A&P grocery chain has paid for buses elsewhere.)

Mrs. Neville and Mrs. Pye agreed there would have been more people at the meeting if they had had the means of getting there. Some think wheelchair access and transportation is unnecessary because they never see many people in wheelchairs on the street. Mrs. Neville often replies "They can't go where you are, and if they could, they couldn't get in."

Barbara Morrow expressed anger that the Bank of Commerce and Jasco, with all of its aides for the physically challenged sitting on the shelves, are inaccessible. As well, Jasco and the grocery stores do not offer delivery service. On the bright side, the new Minden Home Hardware store has two wheelchairs for customer use.

New building code regulations say all new public buildings must be accessible, Mrs. Harte-Maxwell says, and a support group should make sure municipal by-law enforcement officers are aware of the regulations—and enforce them.

On choosing a name for their group, Mrs. Pye suggested New Aggravation Group, NAG.

"Once you get it going, you won't get it stopped," Mrs. Harte-Maxwell said, and she was right. The group has already decided to hold another meeting next month in Minden, date and place to be announced.

The meeting came about because of a goal Phyllis Sisson has had for quite some time. Now in a wheelchair because of post polio, she had been a member of a Barrie support group and wanted one closer to home. Through the Echo, she contacted the Haliburton County Advocacy Resource Group, which organized Friday's meeting.

White Swan contest results ready in week

At last! Next week, the Echo will publish the names of the winners of the White Swan Story contest.

More than 200 entrants were received from public and highschool students and adults. Unfortunately, judging coincided with a very busy and demanding summer. It's easy to forget what summer is like when you start something in the winter.

Over the next few weeks, the Echo will print the best stories in each category. Thank you very much for your support... and patience.

Highlands' beauty and artisans' talent make Studio Tour perfect

by MARTHA PERKINS

Editor

WHAT HAD BEEN GOOD became even better when hundreds of people travelled the county's roads during the past weekend's Studio Tour.

At each of the 24 destinations, there was a steady stream of visitors—it did slow down, however, when the Blue Jays game began later in the afternoon—cramming into the artisans' studios, eager to view the hand-crafted achievements as well as discover the thoughts and processes which went into each piece.

Even the weather was magnanimous, providing participants with beautiful sunny skies and warm temperatures to highlight the scenery they drove past to reach the next studio on their map.

"It's been fabulous," says Betty Kaye, as she stops to chat with the founding organizer of the tour, Marion Hill, who had time to take part as an artist this year. "We're having such a good time explor-

Concert provides inspiration to help CHANGE attitudes

by MARTHA PERKINS
Editor

DOUG CUTLER AND ED MOLL are accustomed to performing in front of large audiences, each in a different way, but both with the hopes of inspiring people.

However, this Sunday's benefit concert for County of Haliburton Advocates for a Naturally Good Environment, CHANGE, will provide them with a unique venue for their talents. Mr. Cutler's audience will be a captive one, and Rev. Moll won't be issuing a sermon to preach his message of awareness.

The concert, October 8 at 7:30 p.m. at the high school, is to raise funds for the environmental group which has been instrumental in bringing recycling to the Highlands. It will headline Brent Titcomb, who's written songs for Anne Murray and performed numerous times on television and radio. (The Titcombs are friends of Gordon Smith, a member of CHANGE.)

For Mr. Cutler and Rev. Moll, it will be an opportunity to show themselves in a different light.

Cutler is a pianist/song writer who is heard a couple of nights a week at the PineStone piano lounge, and also at various events held throughout the year. Yet rarely do people come to his performances with the sole purpose of listening to him. Usually he provides the background music which might soothe the spirit but does not always showcase his talents.

"I'll find this harder because when you're background music, you can blend in and your mistakes are lost in the crowd," Mr. Cutler says, smiling. On a more serious note, he's looking forward to helping CHANGE with the songs he's written which deal with our relationship with the environment.

"CHANGE is a good acronym and in order for that to happen, people need to talk about it, sing about it and hopefully have fun at the same time."

As a musician, he wants to inspire people to realize that they too can bring about positive change. "Each of us has our own personal power—you express who you are and try to reach others who are expressing themselves in their own unique way."

"One strives to be an artist who can express whatever insights have been found, and for me, I'm more interested in the way things link together (insight and entertainment.)"

"Environment is not just a matter of the land, it's also the heart, attitudes have to change—relations to each other, to God, to creation. The attitude has to change into how we participate in it," says Rev. Moll.

Before he became a United Church minister, Rev. Moll was a street busker, sometimes literally singing for his supper. "I needed the money but I just enjoyed the performing and meeting different kinds of people."

But it's not that Rev. Moll has stopped performing now that those days are over. "I already perform every Sunday. In a sense it's much different because obviously worship services are directed to God and there are several performers—the children, choir, people who take up the offering."

"However, in a sense it's the same because people are there to hear a message, to be challenged, to do something about what you've heard."

Both will be singing songs they've written, some with the intention to explain their points of view in an entertaining way, some just to provide a sense of calm in a hurly burly world. People are invited to share those messages Sunday night at the benefit concert.

"Each of us has our own personal power - you express who you are and try to reach others," says pianist/songwriter Doug Cutler, seen here with Reverend Ed Moll.

Second Studio Tour a tremendous success

ing this area. There's a special quality about it. "The problem is I spend too much time at one spot. At the rate we're progressing, we need a week."

Mrs. Kaye has had a copy of the Studio Tour brochure tucked away at the cottage on Koshlong Lake since she and her husband, Kelvin, arrived from Cambridge early this summer. Since they missed the tour last year because they packed up the cottage early, they were bound and determined not to miss it this time around.

"The driving has been a treat—just to be outside on such a beautiful autumn day," Mrs. Kaye says, remarking on the colours which are blooming from the trees. The tour gave them the excuse to travel roads they were unfamiliar with, and along with the pleasant surprises about the landscapes, they were amazed to find so much creativity taking place on the county's back roads.

"We're constantly amazed at the talent here," says Mrs. Kaye.

Will they be back again next year, Mrs. Hill asks. "Oh heavens yes," replies Mr. Kaye. "And next year she'll have all the girls from work with her."

Given how quickly Mrs. Hill's watercolour paintings were selling, this Minden resident will need at least a year to produce enough work for the next tour. Early Saturday morning, she had 25 miniature paintings for those who wanted just a small memento of the tour. Shortly after 10 in the morning, they were all sold and by that afternoon, many of the larger paintings had been sold as well. She had to coerce buyers to pick them up Sunday afternoon so her walls wouldn't look barren for the second day of the tour.

In Gary Chapman's studio overlooking Mountain Lake, paintings with red "sold" stickers outnumbered those which hadn't been purchased yet, and still more people were making their way down the path to his studio. On the hill past their house, Judy Chapman was quickly changing from one role to another—salesperson for those who wanted to buy her colourful, intricate weaving; teacher for those who couldn't understand what computers had to do with weaving; and demonstrator for those who wanted to see her loom in action. By the end of the weekend, everyone would be exhausted.

"It's a good way to see what sort of artists they have here," says Marion Pearson of Norland, sitting on the porch of Mr. Chapman's cabin/studio. The lake is a shimmering blue, the warm wind brushes softly against the cheeks, the surrounding hills are turning a deep orange and there's a lovely walk back to the main road, where the cars are parked. You want to just breathe it all in.

People on the tour seemed just as interested in browsing as they were in buying. Five women from Toronto used the tour to re-discover friendships as well as the Highlands' art and beauty. There was time for chatting, and for gleaming inspiration for their own projects back home.

And the artists? Well, it will take them a while to recoup their energies and replenish their stock, but rest assured, they too will be back on the tour next year. They'll make it even better yet.

PEOPLE

Seniors can kick up a storm when dancing for fitness, fun

by SUSAN GROBER
Staff Reporter

ARE YOU FEELING BORED? Having the blahs? Need to get out of the house once in awhile and kick up your feet? Well, the Stanhope Line Dancers may be offering just what you're looking for.

Every Thursday morning, from 9:30 to 11:30, this bunch of bubbly women (and one man) kick up their heels and boogie to the beat of songs such as New York, New York, Tea for Two and Chattanooga Choo-choo. Some may complain about bad knees and arthritis, but all display energetic enthusiasm while performing anything from the Charleston to the cha-cha.

"It's such a great exercise program," says Myrna McCarthy. "If women only knew how easy it is. They don't have to do every dance. You participate where you can. And it's excellent if you want to lose weight."

"Don't tell me about that," says Doreen Bullied. "I just went away on vacation for a week, so I wouldn't even want to think about weight."

"Oh, going away is no excuse," says Mrs. McCarthy. "You've got to keep in shape."

The dancers are led by The Two Dorothys:

Dorothy Jean Connors, who helped start the group, and Dorothy Milne, who will be returning to Florida this winter.

"Line dancing is great exercise for anyone who can't do aerobics," says Mrs. Connors.

"It's better for you than aerobics because you can't pull a hamstring," agrees Mrs. Milne, adding, "As long as you're careful of the slippery floor."

The floor at the Stanhope Firefighter's Hall is indeed fairly slick, so many dance in running shoes, sneakers, or even bare feet. Another common piece of attire is a mint-green T-Shirt with Stanhope Line Dancers emblazoned on the chest.

"We were thinking of getting some kind of uniform together, like blouses and skirts, but this was cheaper," says Charlotte Ruttan, who helped start the group.

"We all wear white pants in the summertime, but in the winter we'll wear black pants to give us some sort of unity."

Although some adorn their T-Shirts with lace collars or silk scarves, the current fad is to place a sealer from a preserve jar underneath the fabric and fasten it with an elastic band, giving the appearance of a large button at the waist. (Some may think fads are only for school children, but it seems those who stay young in body are young in spirit as well.)

In between dances, group members will chatter away cheerfully until Mrs. Connors blows sharply on the whistle hung around her neck. Then it's time for a brief run-down of the next dance steps: "One-two-cha-cha-cha, Three-four-cha-cha-cha." With members ranging in age from 50 to 75, some will get a little tuckered out and don't participate in every dance, but there are no pressures placed on them. During two hours of dancing, these people really can work up a sweat. "But there's only so much you can take," says Norma Hodgson.

"Now turn and kick and shimmy on down." Dorothy Milne steps into the forefront of the Stanhope Line Dancers; Charlotte Ruttan and Dorothy Jean Connors are seen on either side.

All carefully watch the instructor, following her movements with jaunty steps (1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, right, left, right, left), while music plays on a large tape deck. Some dance steps are a little more complicated than others (Now turn and kick and shimmy on down), but you don't have to be well co-ordinated or musically inclined to become a member.

Glenda Cowling joined the line dancers because she is new to the Maple Lake area, coming from Brampton. "It's a great way to meet people," she says, and adds with a laugh. "It's a bit more invigorating than I expected, but that's okay."

The group certainly offers more than just exercise. There is a definite social aspect as well.

"We get lots of widows and a lot of people whose husbands just don't like dancing," says Mrs. Ruttan. "So the group fills a certain gap in their lives. Some want to come out two or three times a week!"

Milton Fletcher certainly isn't afraid to shake a leg on the dance floor. Mr. Fletcher is the only male member of the Stanhope Line Dancers. ("We had to change our name from the Stanhope Highland Belles because of him," jokes Mrs. Ruttan.) Are the other dancers ever jealous of his wife Margaret? "I don't know about that, but they're awful good to him," says Mrs. Fletcher. It seems her husband gets a lot of attention. ("She's good about sharing him," Mrs. Ruttan says.)

During the summer the group had as many as 36 members, "but that number will drop down to about 10 or 12 in the winter when all the snowbirds fly south," says Mrs. Milne.

The Stanhope Line Dancers would like anyone interested in joining to phone either Mrs. Ruttan at 754-2770 or Betty Culley at 489-2546. There's no age limit—"We'd like to see some kids coming out here—and the group would especially like to see more men joining. In the future the group plans to try out square dancing. "Then we need men for sure," quips one woman. Visitors are welcome to sit in and see if the group is their cup of tea.

But watch out: the enthusiasm is contagious.

"Line dancing is better for you than aerobics because you can't pull a hamstring," says Dorothy Milne.

COMMUNITY NEWS

Chili entrants offer hot stuff at fall fair

DORSET NEWS

by Phyllis Briscoe

We send birthday greetings to Helen Suyyon, who celebrates on September 19.

A group of Dorset ladies, Ann Bew, Ann Swingle, Helen Sutton and Mary Fitz-Gibbon, have returned from an interesting trip through Quebec. They stopped at Hull, visiting the new Museum of Civilization. They found it very lovely and interesting, with an excellent view of the Parliament Buildings and the city of Ottawa. There is a great deal more to be built at this project but promises to be a great place of interest. They visited Old Town Quebec City and St. Anne Beaupre, Montmorency Falls and St. Jean Port Joli. The latter was started to teach young people the art of wood carving as it was thought the craft was being lost. It is now a busy wood carving centre. They also visited Tadoussac and did some whale watching, which they found a unique experience. They tell us the Quebec people were very friendly and helpful even though their ability to speak the language was very limited.

The Dorset Senior Club opened the full season with a pot luck supper which proved a great success. Lots of good food and an abundance of excellent corn on the cob supplied by Norm MacKay. There was a short business meeting followed by a couple of superb films.

Rev. Robinson is home after having a visit with her daughter, Joanne Hatton and her husband William. The Hattons live in Markham.

H.H. Exposure to sunlight softens tomatoes. To ripen them place in a dark place, stem side up. In a cupboard or drawer works just fine.

Birthday greetings to Nicole McDonald who will be 13 on Oct. 7.

The Dorset Fall Fair was once again a great success, thanks to the efficient organization ability of Kerry Lock, who should be congratulated and thanked by the community for this contribution. The Fair is hosted by the Dorset School and its co-operation is appreciated. The Fair was well attended in spite of inclement weather and most of the categories had their quota of entries. The O.P.P. of Minden were on hand with their radar equipment, clocking the children's "fast" ball and the men's as well. The Dorset Lions had their wheel of fun and games there again this year, a great favourite with the children. A vote of thanks for the O.P.P. and the Lions Club.

The people receiving prizes for the best baking items, home grown vegetables and flowers and other categories are too numerous to mention. There were only 2 chili entries; the first prize went to Neil Scott and the second to Ed De Grosbois. The organizers wish to thank the community for their continuing support and the local business people for their generous donation of prizes.

Everyone knows that the judge's job is a difficult one. A special thank you to the judges of the different categories, they are as follows; Don Lillow, Joyce McKay, Wes Edwards, Jenny McLennan, Marlene Shortreed, Eba Russell and Gina Baum. Looking forward to the 1990 Fall Fair, seeing familiar faces as well as new ones.

There was a good turnout for Bingo at the Dorset Senior Club last week. Before starting the game there was a brief presentation by two public health nurses, Jean Tyler from Haliburton and Mary Pat Arnett from Huntsville, on the subject of "flu shots" for seniors. They explained the benefits and explained the problems caused by complications after contracting the disease. Their advice? Ask your family Doctor about flu shots.

Recent visitors to the area were Art and Marg Walkden of Niagara Falls, former residents of Paint Lake. They stayed at Ralph and Gwen Ravens' home while here. The Ravens' entertained many mutual friends while the Walkdens were here, making it possible for old friends to visit, as their visit was brief.

H.H. If using pasteboard boxes to pack clothes or anything else in, cut an oblong opening on either side for a handhold. It will be much easier to handle.

Mr. and Mrs. Len Cooper and Mr. and Mrs. Marvin Varty are pleased to announce the marriage of their children, Kimberley and Michael, at St. George's Church, on September 30, 1989.

COMMUNITY NEWS

Fascinating history of the Norland W.I. is explored

COBOCONK NEWS

by Sheila Lake

Winners in the Coboconk Seniors card games on Tues. Sept. 26 were: Euchre—Gladys Routley, Ada Thomas, Hazel Young, Hazel Young, Thelma Watson, Thelma Adams, Claire Fielder, Tom Bowins, Tom Bowins, Ron Pearce, Bridge: Ralph Brown, Charlotte Patterson, Peggy Saunders.

Congratulations to Thomas and Ada Thomas who are celebrating their 61st wedding anniversary. That is certainly a milestone in this modern age, when few marriages last past five years!! Very best wishes, Les and Ada, and hope you can enjoy another few years yet!!

The New Horizons and Seniors of Coboconk Seniors went on a bus trip to Muskoka on Wednesday, took a boat trip on the Seaguin, and on the way home, stopped for super at Head Lake.

On Thurs. Sept. 28, the Happy Wanderers sang at the hall at Kirkfield at noon. These happy songbirds also sang at the Lindsay fair.

They certainly are well known in this area, and have a busy schedule most of the time.

Walter Marles of Grangebridge was a Sunday dinner visitor at our house.

The Norland Women's

Institute celebrated its annual grandmother's meeting and 60th anniversary on Wed. Sept. 13 with 46 members and visitors present. Among those bringing best wishes from the District Women's Institute were President, Mrs. Audrey Thresher of Burnt River, Secretary, Mrs. Wendy Flett of Bury's Green, 1st Vice Present, Mrs. Eleanor Crane, of Norland, 2nd Vice President, Mrs. Jean Lacey of Minden, Past Secretary, Mrs. Myrtle Griffin, Bury's Green, and Mrs. Chrissie Gillis, Powels Corners, Past 4-H President, Mrs. Annie Robertson of Powels Corners, plus many other visitors from the area. The ladies were very pleased to have one charter member present. Mrs. Annie Watson, now living in Coboconk. One District life member, Mrs. Dorothy Brown, has 47 years. The first short course for the ladies had 20 attending. Some projects in the earlier years were sewing so children could attend school and helping to look after the sick. One project was to raise a dollar for the Women's Institute in the early years. That was a big undertaking. Betty Davies read how her mother did it. One item was selling a piece of pie for two cents, plus sewing, washing and ironing.

Oh for the good old days—maybe! Other readings were "Grandmother's off her rocker" by Dorothy Brown. Pat Watson read of the starting of the Women's Institute in the Stoney Creek in 1897. Bertha Saunders read a children's piece "Art In Heaven", Leona Fountain read about Grandmothers Day; Do we want to go back to those days? No way! A big vote of thanks to Jean Stewart who is District Resolution Chairman as well as President of Norland Women's Institute, for getting together such an entertaining program. Around Norland, she is known as "Mrs. Women's Institute"! Eleanor Crane made beautiful corsages and little these members are alive today: Mrs. Annie Watson, our only charter member, and Mrs. Ivy Boyce and Mrs. Bertha Saunders (nee Bryant) are first year members. The roll call for Oct. 1929 was ideas for an inexpensive Christmas gifts: Flowers from a discarded rubber apron, a powder can covered in the form of a doll dressed in 1830 costume as a serviette holder. The total receipts for the first year were $119.20 and expenses $81.50.

At first, the monthly meetings were held in the

In 1932, Mrs. Palmer and Mrs. H. LeCraw chose sides for answering the roll call, the losing side to serve a banquet for the winning side. In recent years, the Norland W.E. has raised money for the Catscan, the Cenotaph, the Norland Library and Victoria Manor, but do you know, that in 1924, they helped to purchase the new church bell? They purchased a water cooler for the Norland Public School; put first aid kits in Norland, Moores Falls, Dongola and Beech Lake schools; helped to pay for Medical inspec-

League and the Red Cross. It is interesting to note that just recently we received a belated thank you letter from a woman who worked in a hospital in England during the war, thanking us for our nice warm quilts.

Norland W.I. has provided Christmas Treats for the sick and shut-in and the pre-school and school children of the community for more than 40 years. In 1954 they contributed $100 toward the purchase of hose for the township fire pump. In 1959, they planned and celebrated Norland Centennial. They provided a Graduation dinner for the Grade 8 at Norland school, and their teachers, for several years now. Over the years, they have taken part in countless Dep. of Agriculture courses, everything from making hats, sewing with knits, and from needlepoint, to crewel embroidery, candlewicking, and making quilts and cooking courses.

Everything from "Main dish makes The Meal" to baking bread. The courses have changed now and are offered for key people like Presidents and Program Co-Ordinators and there is a charge to attend.

Several of the present members are daughters of the Charter members, carrying on the work their mother's started, but there are new members too, among them, one from Roumania, one from Sweden, two from England, one from Ireland, and for a time, one from Germany and Holland all which add interest to the group.

The first few years the programs were all hand written, now they are just typed out and have as many copies as are needed for members. The hand book as been revised several times, there have been improvements to the Norland W.I. hall with new siding, water and washrooms installed, the kitchen moved to the back, hydro upgraded, a new paint job inside. But over the years, the purpose has remained the same, to make all better homemakers, to promote leadership and to work for better things for Home and Country.

The Norland Seniors are now into the bowling season again, with 12 bowlers coming out last week. There were only two who had high scores. Guess everyone is rather rusty, but Earl Huras had 494 and Marjorie Lee had 474. Good to see Jack Pyke back after his stroke in the spring. Just knew he'd bounce back! Keep up the good work!

The Norland area Seniors chose their committee and this is the list: Convenors, Don Giffin, New Horizons; Social, Marjorie Lee; Refreshments, Helen Graham, who is also representative to the recreation committee; maintenance, Ziggy Kwasnick; crafts, Vera Brown, Hilda Chynoweth and Gene Crisp; membership, Gene Crisp; Victoria County representative, Aggie Brown; alternate, Marjorie Lee; health and welfare, Bus and Nina Boyd; bus committee, George and Gene Crisp; reporter, Millie Moss.

Tickets are now available for the prize quilt and the afghan to be drawn at the new Year's Dance Sat. Dec. 30. Be sure and buy your ticket soon.

The Norland Kids Co-op, under the auspices of the Family Resources of Lindsay, is holding a seven-week course for parents of 3-12 yrs. children, starting Oct. 5 at 7:30 PM. The topic: How to talk so kids will listen, and a discussion on dealing with children's problems. Just $10 for the very informative book and $15 for the course. Send your money to Family Resources, 2 Albert St. North, Lindsay, Ont. to register. In this day of drugs and other problems, this is a must for parents.

On Oct. 12-10 AM to 1 PM in the Norland Community hall, the kids Co-op is holding a Bazaar and refreshments. There will be a craft table, Tupperware, Avon, Regal Stationery, Jocus and creative toys representatives. Something for everyone.

Sept. 21 card scores saw winners of: Euchre: Ziggy Kwasnick, Tom Bowins, George Crisp, Dorothy Brown, Inga Wassell, John Button; Bridge: Ralph Brown, Ruth Brown, Lucky Draw winners were Ralph and Babe Purvis, Gene Crisp and Hazel Young.

Remember the big Thanksgiving Dinner in the Norland Recreation Centre on Sat. Oct. 7, 4:30 PM-7 PM for just $8 adults; $4 for up to 12 yrs. and pre-schoolers are free. No need to buy tickets ahead—just come and enjoy yourself.

"We can accomplish much with one step at a time, one day at a time." This old adage was proven by members of the Norland Women's Institute at the annual grandmothers' meeting and 60th anniversary.

dolls out of dish-clothes. And of course, the ladies love to eat! Joyce Bartley made a lovely 60th Anniversary Cake, then the ladies served lunch, which just proves the old saying "We can accomplish much with one step at a time, one day at a time."

The history of Norland Women's Institute is most interesting. The Norland Women's Institute was organized Sept. 11, 1929 at the home of Mrs. J.A. LeCraw. The first meeting was at the home of the first president Mrs. Leslie Stephens. The first Secretary, Treasurer was Mrs. Worthy Ward. The fee for several years was 25 cents. In the year 1929-1930, there were 41 members. Only three of homes, but since January 1938, the W.I. have owned its own hall, which was the Orange Hall. In the early years, one meeting a year, usually in June, was held in the United Church, when there would be a speaker, and men, women and children were invited. In June 1930 the topic was a homemakers' task and there was also a program of local talent.

The first Women's Institute course was on dressmaking held at Mrs. Walter Stewarts home. Twenty women took part.

Some of the first fund raising events were pumpkin pie socials, bazaars and raffles. In Oct. 1932, Mrs. Bowhey Sr. donated a rug to raffle, and in Jan. 1933, Mrs. J.A. LeCraw donated a cushion top.

tion and music in the schools; gave seeds to each school child for the School Fair; a special entertainment and masquerade in the Stephen's Hall; proceeds to the Victoria wing of the Ross Memorial hospital; and purchased a fan for Christie street hospital.

During the war years, the Norland Women's Institute ladies were very active, sewing, knitting, making quilts and packing boxes for the soldiers. In June 1942, it was reported they had 30 boxes for soldiers and each member gave a half a cup of sugar for cakes for parcels. There were seeds for Britain and jam for Britain projects. More than $2000 was raised and spent on parcels for District servicemen. British War Victims the Navy

Novice bingo caller leads a very good game

SENIOR LEAGUE by Winnifred Barnum

Thursday the ladies of the Anglican Church, Kinmount served the tea party. The lunch was delicious for which we thank the ladies very much. During the lunch Sadie Kitchman sang "How I Miss You Tonight" and we enjoyed it greatly.

In the evening we had bingo. David Bathe of the Kinsmen's Club called for us. It was his first time calling bingo, and he did a good job. Thank you David, we appreciate you coming.

Friday afternoon happy hour was held and George Smith played the violin, accompanied by Doris Robertson on the piano. The residents thank them sincerely.

My sister and her husband, May and Roy Cameron and their daughter Jacqueline Yateman had dinner with me Friday.

On Sept., 23 an open house was held at Stanhope recreation centre for Mary Oliver who celebrated her 100th birthday Sept. 26, 1989. Hyland Crest also held a celebration in her honour. As well as her many friends and relatives her Mary and David and Maureen Thornton and David's mother Edna Thornton from Maclefield, England were present, along with two cousins Jessie Brainbridge and Mrs. Nellie Lachman from Yorkshire, England and a great niece Valarie Crowter from Regina, Sask.

The Hyland Crest auditorium was decorated beautifully. Mary was wheeled in by her son Raymond Oliver, led by Earl Cooper playing the bagpipes. She was presented with many well wishes from all government departments, by the Reeve of Stanhope, Harry Davis, Reeve of Anson, Hindon and Minden Bern Berry and acting Administrator of Hyland Crest Gary McKnight.

Doris Robertson read a poem written by Jimmy Cooper on her life. Her grandson Donald Oliver sang a song he had written about grand-mother's knee. Lunch and birthday cake with 100 lighted candles were served to her guests and residents. Mary had many there to wish her Happy Birthday and to congratulate her on being 100 years old.

Mrs. Isabella Eastman received a picture from Queen Elizabeth last week in honour of Isabella's 100th birthday which made her very happy.

Congratulations to Cora Upton on her birthday Sept. 22, 1989, and to Maron Rose whose birthday was Sept. 23, 1989. We have had 10 September birthdays.

Jean and George Hewitt took Pearl Lyle to her son and daughter-in-law, Bob and Doris Lyles 45th wedding anniversary, Sept. 23, at Powassan.

Sunday Irene and Oscar Scott of Eagle Lake visited several residents, including me.

The Sunday evening Chapel service was given by Rev. John Burgess.

Evelyn Coleman commenced bible study again at 1 o'clock Monday. We are happy to have her back. Many thanks to Evelyn.

There were no movies Monday night because of mechanical difficulties with the projector.

On behalf of the residents of Hyland Crest, I wish to thank the lions Club of Minden for their generous gift of $7,000 to our bus fund. We appreciate your efforts in our behalf immensely.

Tuesday the morning service was conducted by

Rev. Dawn Gilby of the Anglican Church in Kinmount. It was also a communion service.

Eastern trip has some stormy times on way

WEST GUILFORD NEWS by Eleanor Cooper

Derek and Pam Rolfe had a September holiday down East. They toured the north side of the St. Lawrence, ferried across to Riviere-du-Loup, drove around the Gaspé peninsula, and continued into New Brunswick. They report the weather and seafood both wonderful, although the last of Hurricane Hugo caused them a little difficulty in Quebec on their return. Accommodation at campsites provided the Rolfes with the kind of holiday they wanted, and they returned refreshed from their week and a half away.

Stephanie Paul, daughter of Joy Evans and granddaughter of George and Edna Tipton, was married on Sept. 23 to Richard Ian Collins. The wedding took place on board the Lady Belle in Orillia. The couple will be touring B.C. for two weeks and calling on a brother in Calgary before returning to Ontario.

On Sept. 26, Bert, Louella, and Shirley Bryant and David and Andrea Hulbig had a wonderful visit with Arthur and Myra Barry at Fairview in Huntville.

Congratulations to Rod and Windy Sisson whose marriage took place at St. Peter's Church on Saturday.

Michael and Kimberley Varty's wedding dance was held at the Centre on Saturday evening. Best wishes from their friends in West Guilford go to them also.

A very pleasant afternoon was enjoyed at Grace Foster's on Sept. 30, where friends of Grace's mother, Merle (Langman) Cox, gathered to celebrate Merle's 86th birthday.

St. Andrew's Church was decorated with garden produce, fruit, and coloured leaves on Sunday to celebrate Harvest Thanksgiving.

Sympathy to Grace Welch in the loss of her husband Gary in Cameron.

DEVELOP YOUR SKILLS! We are going to have literacy tutors available to individuals who would like to further develop their reading and writing skills. We all have difficulty from time to time completing various forms and questionnaires, or reading a variety of information that we come across each day. This can be very frustrating. We would like to help individuals improve on these skills and make every day living a little easier. Students and tutors are matched according to the area they both live in. The tutor will spend approximately 2 hours a week with his or her student, and will provide appropriate reading material. Our tutors are properly trained, enthusiastic, friendly people volunteering their time, at no charge to you! If you are interested in this terrific opportunity or know of someone who might be, please call Jane Seib at the Haliburton County Employment Centre, 457-1316.
